Introduction

Welcome to Ready for Advanced, a course which is designed to help you prepare for the Cambridge English: Advanced examination, also known as Certificate in Advanced English (CAE),

This book contains a wide range of activities aimed at improving your English and developing the language and skills which you will need to pass the examination. As well as providing relevant practice in reading, writing, listening and speaking, each unit of Ready for Advanced includes one or more Language focus sections, which analyse the main grammar areas at advanced level, together with Vocabulary slots, which give particular emphasis to collocation.

The course also includes a systematic approach to word formation, which appears as a task type in the Reading and Use of English paper. At regular intervals, you will find special sections which focus on the most important aspects of this task, ensuring that you are properly prepared to deal with it in the examination.

At the end of every unit, there is a two-page Review section, which enables you to revise and practise the new language you have encountered in the unit.

Throughout the book you will find the following boxes, which are designed to help you when performing the different tasks:

What to expect in the exam: these contain useful information on what you should be prepared to see, hear or do in a particular task in the examination.

How to go about it: these give advice and guidelines on how to deal with different task types and specific questions.

Don't forget!: these provide a reminder of important points to bear in mind when answering a particular question.

Useful language: these contain vocabulary and structures which can be used when doing a specific speaking or writing activity.

Further information and advice on each of the papers in the Cambridge English: Advanced exam is included in the five supplementary 'Ready for ...' units. These are situated at regular intervals in the book and can be used at appropriate moments during the course. The Ready for Writing unit contains model answers for each of the main task types, together with advice, useful language and further writing tasks for you to complete.

At the end of the book you will find an extensive Wordlist, which builds on the vocabulary areas seen in the units, as well as the Listening scripts and a Grammar reference. This contains detailed explanations of the grammar areas seen in the units.

Overview of the Examination

The Cambridge English: Advanced examination consists of four papers, as shown below and on page 5. The Writing, Listening and Speaking papers each carry 20% of the total marks; the Reading and Use of English paper carries 40% (20% for the Reading tasks and 20% for the Use of English tasks). A low mark in one paper does not necessarily mean a candidate will fail the examination; it is the overall mark which counts.

For more information and advice on each paper, see the appropriate 'Ready for ...' unit, as well as the relevant sections in the main units of the book.

Reading and Use of English 1 hour 30 minutes

There are eight parts to this paper: Parts 1 to 4 are grammar and vocabulary tasks; Parts 5 to 8 are reading tasks. For the Use of English tasks, each correct answer in Parts 1 to 3 receives one mark; each question in Part 4 carries up to two marks. For the reading tasks, each correct answer in Parts 5 to 7 receives two marks, and there is one mark for each question in Part 8.

Part	Task Type	Number of Questions	Task Format
1	Multiple-choice cloze	8	A text with 8 gaps; there is a choice of 4 answers for each gap.
2	Open doze	8	A text with 8 gaps, each of which must be completed with one word.
3	Word formation	8	A text containing 8 gaps. The task is to complete each gap with the correct form of a given word.
4	Key word transformation	6	Gapped sentences which must be completed using a given word.
5	Multiple choice	6	A text followed by multiple- choice questions with four options.
6	Cross-text multiple matching	.4	Four short texts followed by multiple-matching questions. These require candidates to compare opinions and attitudes expressed in the texts.
7	Gapped text	6	A text from which paragraphs have been removed. Candidates replace each of these in the appropriate part of the text.
8	Multiple matching	10	A text preceded by multiple- matching questions which require candidates to find specific information in a text or texts.

Writing 1 hour 30 minutes

There are two parts to this paper, each of which carries the same number of marks. Part 1 is compulsory, so must be answered by all candidates, whereas in Part 2 candidates choose one from three tasks. Candidates are required to write 220–260 words for each part.

Part	Task Type	Number of Tasks	Task Format
1	Essay	1 (compulsory)	Candidates write an essay based on two points from a choice of three. They explain which of the two points is more important, giving reasons for their opinions,
2		3 (candidates choose one)	A writing task with a clear context, purpose for writing and target reader. Candidates write one of the following: letter, proposal, report, review.

Listening about 40 minutes

This paper consists of four parts with a total of 30 questions, each of which carries one mark. Each part contains one or more recorded texts, and all recordings are heard twice. Candidates are tested on their ability to understand, for example, gist, main points, specific information, function, purpose, feelings, attitudes and opinions.

Part	Task Type	Number of Questions	Task Format
1	Multiple choice	6.	Three short unrelated extracts from exchanges between interacting speakers. For each extracthere are two multiplechoice questions, each with three options.
2	Sentence completion	8	A monologue lasting approximately 3 minutes. Candidates write a word or short phrase to complete sentences.
3	Multiple choice	6	A conversation between two or more speakers, lasting approximately 4 minutes, Multiple-choice questions have four options.
4	Multiple matching	10	Five short monologues on the same theme, each lasting approximately 30 seconds. There are two separate tasks. For each task you are required to select the correct option from a choice of eight.

Speaking 15 minutes

There are four parts to this paper. There are usually two candidates and two examiners. Candidates are required to demonstrate their spoken language skills in a range of contexts.

Part	Task Type	Time	Task Format
1	Social interaction	2 minutes	Candidates give personal information in response to questions from the interviewer.
2	Long turn	4 minutes	Each candidate talks about a set of pictures for about 1 minute, and comments on the other candidate's pictures for about 30 seconds.
3	Collaborative task	4 minutes	Candidates are given instructions with written prompts which they use for discussion (2 minutes) and then a decision-making task (1 minute). The giving of instructions takes about 1 minute.
4	Further discussion	5 minutes	The interviewer leads a discussion which is related to the topic of Part 3.

Long turn

Look at these pictures. They show people facing different challenges.

Student A:

Compare two of the pictures, and say what challenges the people face, the kind of problems they might encounter, and how they might be feeling.

Student B:

When your partner has finished talking about the two pictures, say which of them represents the more difficult challenge.

How to go about it

- When comparing your pictures, talk about the similarities and differences between them.
  - e.g. Both pictures show ..., but this one ..., whereas the other
- Speculate about the pictures as indicated in the instructions. You are not asked simply to describe what is happening.
  - e.g. They might (well) have problems finishing.
  - She's likely to/She'll probably find it quite tough to begin with.

    I expect/imagine they're feeling a little lonely at the moment.
- Use a wide range of vocabulary. For example, when speculating about people's feelings, go beyond the use of simple words such as happy, sad or nervous.

Before you do the task, complete the following exercise.

Useful language

Arrange the words and phrases in the box into three groups according to whether they can be used instead of:

very happy

sad or wanting to cry tearful nervous or worried tearful anxious delighted apprehensive miserable elated close to tears thrilled tense weepy on edge overjoyed

Now change roles. Follow the instructions again using the remaining pictures.

Multiple choice

You are going to read an article about Parker Liautaud, a young man who has been on several polar expeditions. With your partner discuss your ideas on the following:

- · the type of person who would take up such a challenge
- their reasons for doing so
- · the preparation required
- · the conditions or difficulties they experience in the Arctic and the Antarctic
- Now read the article. For questions 1-6 on page 9, choose the answer (A, B, C or D) which you think fits best according to the text.

How to go about it

- Before you look at the questions, quickly read through the whole text to get an idea of the content.
   Give yourself three minutes to read the text on page 8. Look for information on Parker Liautaud which is relevant to the points in exercise 1. Compare your answers with a partner.
- During both your quick read and your more detailed read, you will need to use context to help you guess the meaning of unknown vocabulary, as you may not take a dictionary into the exam.
  - Discuss with your partner the possible meanings of the words in bold in the first two paragraphs.
- Read each question carefully and find the parts of the text which relate to each one. In Part 5 of the Reading and Use of English paper, the questions follow the same order as the information in the text.
  - Don't choose your answers yet. In the margin, mark the general area of the text which is relevant to each question.
- For each question, eliminate the options which are clearly wrong and choose the best answer.
   Underline key phrases or sentences in the text which help you make your choice.
- Reread the questions. Do the options you have chosen accurately reflect the information you have underlined in the text?

Justify your answers to your partner, explaining why other options are incorrect.

One cool guy

How Parker Liautaud aims to save the world, one polar expedition at a time

There are things that you expect to see etched into the face of every polar explorer: broken veins; the

- 5 scars of a few battles with frostbite. On meeting Parker Liautaud at Venice Beach in sunny California, I see he has yet to gain a single
- 10 one of these. Appearances can be deceptive, though. At 17, Parker has already taken part in three serious polar expeditions. It's also
- 15 worth mentioning that he happens to have impeccable manners and that quiet sense of self-confidence common among the products of
- 20 expensive boarding schools. Born in California, he and his four siblings spent their formative years in the UK, after their father, a successful
- 25 businessman, decided that the family might benefit from spending some time in London.
- Until 13, Parker was an ordinary kid. That changed after he met polar explorer Robert Swan. They began an email correspondence which escalated into a friendship
- 35 that eventually saw the then 14-year-old invited to join a trip to the Antarctic. He said yes almost instantly. Friends and family, to whom he'd so
- far shown he had no particular interest in outdoor pursuits, particularly polar ones, were perplexed – to say the least. 'I was the second-choice
- 45 goalkeeper for the third-lowest football team in school. So the prospect of me hauling a sled across miles of snow was kind of a farce, and I was 50 really not taken seriously,' he
- really not taken senously," he recalls. He ate lots of chicken, spent a long time in the gym, and proved them wrong.

- The following year, Liautaud 55 cooked up a more ambitious plan: to become the youngest-ever person to trek to the North Pole. He found a new accomplice, the veteran
- 60 explorer Doug Stoup, and through a mixture of charm and luck raised the roughly $150 000 cost of the record attempt. Then disaster struck.
- 65 The early months of 2010, when the duo set out were among the warmest on record. The Pole, which is essentially a GPS location on a
- 70 constantly-drifting collection of ice sheets, became virtually inaccessible, surrounded by patches of uncovered ocean. A trip which had intended to
- 75 raise awareness of melting ice caps had been obstructed. By melting ice caps. "We would get up, battle through these difficult conditions for 15
- 80 hours, then wake up the next morning and find that we were further away from the Pole than we'd started the previous morning,' he says.
- 85 After 14 days' trying, and with rations running low, they admitted defeat.
  - Liautaud came home and decided to try again. He
- 90 raised another six-figure sum and set off in spring 2011. Conditions were cold but perfect, and he and Stoup reached the Pole in no time.
- 95 'By complete coincidence, we arrived at the moment when a helicopter landed to drop off a group of tourists who'd paid to spend ten minutes
- 100 there,' he recalls. 'Explorers call them "champagners". Anyway, it was all a little weird. It felt like I had just finished a cross-country ski
- 105 race, or something.' Ignoring the onlookers, he promptly 'checked in' to the North Pole on the social media site, Foursquare. At the time, that 110 was also a first.

- While it might not have made him the youngest North-Poler, the success did give Liautaud a platform to continue advocacy 115 against climate change,
  - through both his campaigning website, The Last Degree, and work with pressure groups. His view is that it's his generation,
- 120 rather than the one that today's world leaders belong to, that must push hardest for cuts in carbon emissions. They are the ones with the most
- 125 at stake. Scientific opinion regarding the existence and scale of the problem is pretty much settled, he argues, adding that the portion of the
- 130 public which still doubts the reality of man-made climate change – and remains hostile to legislation that might solve it – is largely ill-informed,
- 135 although 'that isn't necessarily their fault'.
  - Liautaud's advocacy work has made him enemies. When Anthony Watts, a prominent
- 140 climate change sceptic, wrote a scathing blog entry attacking one of his polar expeditions, Liautaud was referred to as a 'joke' by
- 145 media figures. But Liautaud's high-profile polar trips are certainly shaping the climatechange debate. He has already contributed to research
- 150 projects carried out by the International Atomic Energy Agency and will soon set up two stations to record weather data. It must be an exhausting
- 155 life, fraught with hostility. But Liautaud seems to relish the fight. When you've hauled a sled across hundreds of miles of frozen tundra, lived off
- 160 freeze-dried food for weeks, and learnt how to ward off a hostile polar bear, attempting to save Planet Earth is all in a day's work.

- When the writer met Parker Liautaud at Venice Beach, he was
  - A impressed by his level of maturity.
  - B amused by his youthful appearance.
  - C concerned about his uninformed beliefs.
  - D prepared to find reasons to dislike him.
- When Parker agreed to go to the Antarctic with Robert Swan, other people
  - A attempted to talk him out of it.
  - B advised him on aspects of preparation.
  - C were puzzled about his decision.
  - D were supportive of his plans.
- 3 Parker and Doug Stoup were prevented from reaching the North Pole by
  - A the movement of the ice.
  - В the failure of equipment.
  - C the severity of the weather.
  - D their own physical limits.
- What is Parker emphasizing in the sentence 'It felt like I had just finished a cross-country ski race. '?
  - A his sense of relief on completing his trek
  - B the desire to celebrate a hard-won victory
  - C the fact that a crowd had witnessed his achievement
  - D the contrast between his previous attempt and this one
- 5 What does the writer suggest about Parker and his fight against climate change in the fifth paragraph?
  - A His arguments must be based on proven fact.
  - B He needs to adjust his approach if he wants a wider audience.
  - C He is yet to understand the complexity of politics.
  - D It is younger people that he wants to target.
- What point does the writer make about the criticism directed at Parker?
  - A It is the reaction of a minority of people.
  - В Parker is quite capable of dealing with it.
  - C It has become increasingly unfair.
  - D It is not something that Parker pays attention to.

Reacting to the text

Is Parker Liautaud the sort of person you might admire? Why/Why not?

Parker has been able to fund his trips by getting large corporations and charities to sponsor him; why do you think these organizations were willing to help?

Talk about one of your own personal achievements. If possible, comment on what motivated you, your preparations and the feelings you experienced.

Language focus 1: Modal verbs 1: Might, could, may and can

Sentences 1–7 all contain the modal verb might. Match each of the sentences to the idea they express.

present possibility future possibility past possibility past possibility which did not happen annoyance concession lack of enthusiasm

- 1 You might at least help me!
- 2 I wish you'd drive more carefully. You might have had an accident back there.
- 3 I do hope they're OK. They might have had an accident or something.
- 4 I might be home a bit later tonight. I've got a meeting at five
- 5 Put the telly on there might be something good on.
- 6 There's nothing on telly, so we might as well go to bed.
- 7 He might be good-looking, but he can't sing very well.

With no change in meaning, might can be substituted by could in sentences 1–5 and may in sentences 3–7.

- Complete each of these sentences in an appropriate way. Compare your ideas with those of a partner.
  - 1 I'm so angry with him. I do think he might have ...
  - 2 We've missed the beginning, so we may as well ...
  - 3 It was rather dangerous. Someone could have ...
  - 4 I can't find it anywhere. I think I may have ...
  - 5 She might have a university degree, but ...
  - 6 Cheer up! It might ...

3 The following sentences 1–6 all contain the modal verb can/ can't. Match each of the sentences to the idea they express.

request deduction criticism inability theoretical possibility prohibition

- 1 It can store up to 30 000 separate images.
- 2 You can be really irritating sometimes, you know.
- 3 Can you hold this for a second?
- 4 I can't do it I'm not tall enough.
- 5 It can't be very healthy if it's got all that in it.
- 6 No, you can't! It's far too late.
- With your partner, think of a context for each of the sentences in exercise 3. Use modal verbs to express your ideas.

Example:

1 This could be somebody talking about a piece of software – a compact disc for example. It might be a shop assistant trying to sell it.

Read more about might, could, may and can in the Grammar reference on page 215.

Extension

- 1 In addition to using modal verbs, there are several alternative ways of expressing future possibility. In sentences a and b one of the four possibilities has a different meaning to the other three. Underline the odd one out.
  - There's a strong/distinct/faint/real possibility that I could lose my job.
  - b There's an outside/a slight/a fair/a remote chance that Lara might be at the party tonight.

In sentences c and d underline the incorrect alternative.

- c They have every/good/little/no chance of winning.
- d You could easily/well/conceivably/predictably get there in under two hours.

What is the difference in meaning between sentences e and f?

- e She's highly likely to pass the exam.
- f She's hardly likely to pass the exam.
- 2 Complete the following sentences so that they express your true feelings about the future.
  - 1 I think I stand a good chance of ... (+ gerund).
  - 2 To improve my chances of ... (+ gerund), I need to ...
  - 3 In the world today we face the very real possibility that ... will
  - 4 There's an outside chance that ... will/might/could ...
  - 5 It seems highly unlikely that ... will ...

Comment on and discuss each other's views.

Vocabulary: Collocations

 Complete each of the gaps with one of the nouns from the box.

challenge ambition	success failure	motivation
-----------------------	--------------------	------------

- a The film Star Wars was an overnight
- b I have a burning ______ to travel to Australia.
- When pupils tire of studying, a system of rewards can help increase student
- d Sadly, my attempts to learn Japanese met with complete _____.
- The government faces the formidable of reducing unemployment.
- 2 In exercise 1, the words in bold are 'collocates' of the nouns you wrote. This means that they are often used together with those nouns. Write a new sentence for each noun, using the collocates in bold. The sentences must be true.
- 3 Compare and discuss your sentences with another student.
- 4 In sentence e in exercise 1, the verb face collocates with challenge. Which of the five nouns do each of the following pairs of verbs collocate with?

fulfil realize	a/an	end in achieve enjoy	9	improvelack
take up rise to	a/an

- 5 The adjective formidable also collocates with challenge. All three words in each of the groups below can be used in combination with one of the nouns from exercise 1. Write an appropriate noun in each of the spaces.
  - a major/new/daunting
    b secret/lifelong/main c total/continued/dismal
  - d huge/great/resounding _____e high/strong/poor
- 6 Study the collocations in this section for two minutes, then close your book and write down as many as you can remember. Compare your results with your partner's.

Multiple choice 1.1-1.3

What awards, international and national, are well known in your country?

Have you ever won an award, prize or trophy for anything? If so, how did you feel about receiving it?

You will hear three different extracts. For questions 1-6, choose the answer (A, B or C) which fits best according to what you hear. There are two questions for each extract.

What to expect in the exam

- There are four parts to the Listening paper. In Part 1 you will always hear three short extracts from different conversations. There are two multiple-choice questions for each extract.
- In the exam, you will hear each extract twice before the next one is played.

Extract One

You hear two musicians from the same group talking about an awards ceremony.

- 1 According to the man, why did the group not attend the ceremony?
  - A They believed it would be morally wrong.
  - B They were busy doing concerts.
  - C They did not expect to win.
- 2 According to the woman, the people who voted for the group
  - A have been loyal fans for a long time.
  - B will soon lose interest in their music.
  - C agree with their ideals and beliefs.

Extract Two

You hear part of a radio discussion in which two people are talking about sport.

- 3 The first man says that the home team lost because
  - A some team members were inexperienced.
  - B their training has not been effective.
  - C they were too confident of a win.
- 4 Both speakers dislike the way that two players
  - A react to media attention.
  - B are behaving in a disloyal way.
  - C have little to offer as role models.

Extract Three

You hear two university students talking about a fund-raising event called 40-hour Famine.

- 5 According to the woman, the purpose of 40-hour Famine is to
  - A encourage students to do some charity work abroad.
  - B persuade people to give money to charity regularly.
  - C help people understand the effects of famine on people's lives.
- 6 After taking part in last year's 40-hour Famine event, the man savs he was
  - A proud of what he had achieved.
  - B determined to do better in the future.
  - C disappointed he had not fulfilled his aim.
- 3 O Do you know of any cases where someone has turned down an award? Why did they reject it?

Talk about something you failed to achieve. How disappointed were you?

4 Look back at the reading text on page 8 and underline those nouns which have been formed by the addition of a suffix to a verb, adjective or another noun. Add them to the list in exercise 3.

Language focus 2: Spelling

 Look at these two extracts from the reading text on page 8.

After 14 days' trying,... they admitted defeat.

Liautaud was referred to as a 'joke' by media figures.

The final consonant of the verbs admit and refer is doubled to form the past tense. Similarly, the consonant is doubled in drumming and beginning, but not in claiming or opening. Why is this?

Work with a partner. You are going to dictate ten two-word items of vocabulary to each other. Student A should turn to page 204 and Student B to page 207.

Formal letter

What to expect in the exam

In Part 2 of the Writing paper, you might have the opportunity to write a letter or an email. You may be required to use a formal or less formal style, depending on your reason for writing, and on the target reader. You will not need to include addresses, but you should know how to begin your letter/email appropriately (e.g. To the Editor, Dear Sir/Madam, Dear Simon Smith, To whom it may concern, To all staff members, Hi Rose) and finish it (e.g. Yours sincerely, Regards, Thank you for your attention, See you soon).

1 Read the following Part 2 task and the model answer.

Does the answer address all aspects of the task?

Would it have a positive effect on the manager reading it?

You are planning an event to raise public awareness about a project that is important to you. You decide to write a letter to the manager of a large organization to ask for money to help finance the event.

Your letter should explain

- · what the project is.
- · what the event will involve.
- how the money will be used.

Write your letter in 220-260 words.

Dear Ann Robertson

I am writing on behalf of Devonport Community Centre, where I am Social Secretary. As you may know, the community centre runs many evening classes for adults and provides a variety of sports programmes for teenagers. We also offer after-school care and activities for many local children whose parents are at work. Unfortunately, our kitchen facilities are in urgent need of an upgrade, and as a non-profit organization, we need assistance to raise the necessary funds.

We are planning to hold a fair in March to help finance our project. There will be demonstrations by our tae kwon do group, entertainment from our musicians, food stalls set up by parents and many activities for young children to enjoy. We hope that the event will not only help us to buy new equipment for the kitchen, but will also encourage local builders, plumbers and other craftsmen to volunteer some of their time.

In order to attract people to our fair, we would also like to set up a rock climbing wall and inflatable castle. We are therefore hoping that you might be able to help us by paying for the hire of this equipment. Naturally, we would be very happy to promote you as our key sponsor.

If sponsorship from Fresh World were possible, I would be happy to arrange a meeting at any time that was convenient to you.

Thank you for your attention.

Yours sincerely

Jason Norwood

- 2 Appropriate paragraphing and good use of a range of linking devices are essential features of all writing tasks in the Cambridge English: Advanced exam.
  - What information is contained in each paragraph of the model answer above?
  - · Underline examples of words or phrases that link ideas or sentences.
- 3 For most Advanced writing tasks, you will need to persuade the target reader that something is a good idea or the right course of action to take.

How might the following elements of the model answer have a positive effect on the manager?

- the way the writer describes the community centre and the event
- · the point at which the writer asks for money
- the verbs and tenses used by the writer in the third and fourth paragraphs
- 4 To obtain a high mark in the Advanced examination you need to use a wide range of relevant vocabulary and structures.

Circle language the writer uses to refer to the issue of 'money' without using the word, e.g. non-profit organization.

5 Write your own letter for the question in exercise 1 in 220–260 words.

How to go about it

- Plan carefully what you will say for each part of the question. Organize your ideas into logical paragraphs.
   For this question you could devote one paragraph to each of the three bullet points, as in the model answer.
- Be persuasive, but not aggressive.
   Write your answer in an appropriate register.
  - A formal register would help ensure that your request for money is taken seriously by the manager.
- Use a range of relevant vocabulary, grammatical structures and linking devices.
- Begin and end your letter in a suitable way.

2 Times change

Sentence completion 1.4

These photographs were all taken over 50 years ago.

How has life changed since then? If the same photographs were taken now, which features would be the same and which would be different?

You will hear a student called Simon Todd, giving a presentation about a visit he made to a national museum. What different aspects of history and human development do museums show?

What to expect in the exam

- There is always a pause before you hear the listening. Use this to read through the questions and predict the type of answer required; for example, a place name, an area of study, a type of job, an object or a process.
- You should write the actual words you hear in the recording.
- Answers are usually single words or short noun phrases of no more than three words.
- For some of the questions you will hear distractors: words which might at first seem relevant, but which do not complete the answer correctly. For question 1, for example, you will hear Simon mention two fields of research, but only one of these is related to the curator's museum job.
- Check your answers; incorrect spelling and grammar may lose marks.
- Part 2 is always a monologue. As with all recordings in the Listening paper, it is played twice.
- 3 Before you do the task, read all the questions and try to predict the type of information you might hear for each one.
- 4 For questions 1–8, complete the sentences with a word or short phrase.

Working at the National Museum The curator had chosen (1) _______ as her specialization in the museum. The curator said that good (2) _______ Were vital for anyone working at the museum. The curator explained that the (3) _______ of an item often requires collaboration. Simon says that the museum often has to turn down (7) _______ that people want to donate. The curator told Simon that finding ways to save (8) _______ was the museum's greatest challenge.

Collaborative task

Read tasks 1 and 2 below. Then, before you do the tasks, read the information in the boxes at the bottom of the page.

Here are some items which might represent our lives today in a new museum exhibition.

Talk with your partner about how well these items represent our lives today.

clothes by a popular fashion brand

a popular internet clip

a fast food menu

How representative might these items be of our lives today?

a newspaper

examples of currency

Now decide which item would be of most interest to future generations visiting the museum.

How to go about it

- Part 3 is an interactive task. As well as giving your own opinions, ask your partner what they think and respond to their comments. Always give reasons for your opinions.
- In task 1, you can talk about the areas in any order you choose. Say as much as you can about each one.
- Do not start to make your decisions for task 2 while you are doing task 1. They are two separate tasks.
- In task 2, you do not have to agree with your partner when making your final decision.
- In both tasks, aim to demonstrate your linguistic ability by using a wide range of vocabulary and structures.

Useful language

Complete each of the gaps with one of the phrases in the box. There is an example at the beginning (0).

Reading and Use of English 1

Open cloze

What to expect in the exam

- The open cloze is a short text with eight gaps, each of which has to be filled with one word.
- The main focus is on grammatical words, e.g. prepositions, auxiliary verbs, articles, relative pronouns and conjunctions.
- Read the following text, ignoring the gaps for the moment. Which famous toy is being described?

THE IMPOSSIBLY CURVY DOLL

It was while she was watching her daughter Barbara playing with cut-outs of adult women (2) .......... creator Ruth Handler first come up (3) ....... the idea. At the time, dolls in America always took the form of babies so when she first proposed a prototype to executives at the toy company, Mattel, she (4) ...... turned down.

(8) .....name came from Handler's son.

2 Read the text again and think of the word which best fits each gap. Use only one word in each gap. There is an example at the beginning (0). Write your answers IN CAPITAL LETTERS. Make sure you read the example.

When you have finished, justify your answers to your partner, with particular reference to words and sentences before and after the gaps.

3 Here is the final paragraph of the text above. Read it and discuss the following question: Do you agree more with Handler or the feminists?

She was not without her critics. Her shapely figure was essentially unattainable and feminists attacked Handler for presenting young girls with an image of adult beauty they could never achieve. Handler was not bothered by this. 'My whole philosophy was that through the doll, the little girl could be anything she wanted to become,' she later wrote.

Language focus 1: Talking about the past

A Review

Complete each of the spaces with an appropriate form of the verb in brackets. Choose from the past, past perfect or present perfect, in either the simple or continuous form. There may be more than one possible answer. If so, explain any differences in meaning.

1	I(never/ki	ss) anyone until I (meet) you.
2	That's the third time I	(have) to tell you to stop shouting!	- Andrew Programme College Chryslette College

3 It looks as if he ______ (cry) again. His eyes are all red and puffy.

B Further ways of talking about the past

- Underline the correct alternatives in the following sentences.
   Either one, two or all three alternatives may be possible.
  - When I was a teenager I used to know/would know/ knew the words to all The Beatles songs.
  - 2 It's years since I've ridden/I haven't ridden/I rode a bike. I'm not sure if I could do it now.
  - 3 I'd like to have travelled/have liked to travel/have liked to have travelled more when I was younger.
  - 4 I remember that concert. It was the first time I've seen/ I'd seen/I was seeing the band play live.
  - 5 I'd rather my parents didn't make/wouldn't have made/hadn't made me go to piano lessons when I was little.

- 6 She was going to work/thinking to work/to have worked in her mother's business, but decided instead to continue her studies.
- 7 After he'd done/Having done/Being done it once, he was happy to give another presentation.
- 8 It has not rained since he's been here/he got here/ his arrival.

Check your answers by reading the Grammar reference on pages 215 and 216.

Rewrite sentences 1–5 so that they are true for you. Use the words in bold together with an appropriate verb in the correct form. Compare your sentences with those of your partner.

- 1 What period of time do you think each of these images is from? These images appear in four different books dealing with a particular historical subject. What do you think the subjects might be?
- You are going to read a review of history books. For questions 1-10, choose from the sections (A-D). The sections may be chosen more than once.

How to go about it

- Skim through all four sections quickly to get an idea of their content.
- Read all the questions to see the kind of information you are looking for.
- Read section A, then look again at the questions, answering any that you can.
- Do the same for the other three sections.
- If there are any questions you have not answered, scan the sections again, looking for the specific information you need.
- To help you, parts of section A have been underlined. Match these parts to the appropriate questions. As you answer the other questions, underline the relevant parts of sections B-D in the same way.

In which section are the following mentioned?

personal stories being expressed in an amusing way	1
the idea of enjoyment coming from a sense of nostalgia	2
the possibility that people will not be reading page by page	3
the fact that certain people have been looking forward to a book's publication	4
an element that makes the book superior to others on the same topic	5
the effective way the book has been compiled from different kinds of text	6
the reviewer's disapproval of the insufficient depth of investigation	7
the view that this book will alter the way you feel about the subject matter	8
an autobiographical element explaining the author's motivation	9
the possibility of disapproval of the author's handling of a particular issue	10

This month's history books

Eric Moore reviews a selection of history publications

Britain under the reign of Queen Victoria (1837–1901) witnessed a great leap forward in technological terms, propelled by the Industrial Revolution. Social reform, however, took longer 5 to gain momentum. In The Unseen, Amelia Drew skilfully intersperses extracts from Victorian household management manuals describing the duties of young servants with contemporary pamphlets calling for improvements in working 10 conditions. The diary entries of Drew's greatgrandmother also appear, allowing us a glimpse into the gruelling and monotonous life of a housemaid. Drew does not shy away from providing meticulous descriptions of the foul tasks 15 that servants were charged with and the kind of horrific injury that befell very young factory workers, and in doing so, dispels any lingering romantic notions of this era. This is a compelling book, but I suspect one that will be dipped into 20 rather than read in its entirety.

In January 1918, the first cases of a new strain of influenza were observed in Kansas, USA. The ensuing pandemic lasted to December 1920, spreading across Europe, and even to the Arctic, claiming an estimated 20–50 million lives.

With little understanding of how the 'Spanish flu' virus spread, many people were forced to rely on folk remedies such as eating onions or wearing goose fat poultices. In Contagion,

Dirk Smithey takes a comprehensive look at over 2000 years of disease and treatment. He is not the first to attempt this, but he writes with unusual compassion, and in doing so, elevates his work above the rest. Interestingly,

- once we arrive in the 21st century, Smithey makes reference to the anti-immunization trend, but does not enter the debate, a decision I suspect may irritate those working towards the elimination of needless childhood disease. All
- 40 in all, an alarming yet fascinating read.

Since walking out of the continent now known as Africa, modern man has regularly packed his bags and moved on. Such journeys into the unknown often require a leap of faith. This is the case for many of the subjects interviewed in Aisha Dunbar's Worlds Apart, a group of people who underwent the immigrant experience in the 1970s. As they recall the cultural and language barriers they once had to face, they all speak of 50 the need to believe that life will get better. In the first chapter, Dunbar herself provides a first-hand account of being on the receiving end of racism and the strategies she employed to deal with those who abused her, and cites this as her incentive for 55 assembling this collection of other voices. Worlds Apart is, admittedly, a slightly sentimental book, particularly in the narrative thread that connects each person's story, but the anecdotes they tell are often genuinely humorous and uplifting.

60 Fans of Neil Gough's The Right Man, a look at political campaigning in the 21st century, have eagerly anticipated a follow-up, but whether his latest volume, In Retrospect, rises to the challenge is arguable. This book poses the question 'does 65 advertising merely reinforce stereotypes or create them?' It is bursting with commercial artwork and slogans from the 1950s onwards, and some may appreciate the trip down memory lane to a time when 'real men' smoked pipes and wore 70 fedora hats, and when slogans such as 'Christmas morning she'll be happier with a Hoover and Don't worry darling, you didn't burn the beer' were perfectly acceptable. Where In Retrospect falls down is its lighter emphasis on the analysis side of things, 75 and thus it feels a superficial read at times.

Nevertheless, a treasure worth buying or giving.

Reacting to the text

Which of these books would you be interested to read? Why?

Describe a book, film or TV programme that provides an insight into the way people once lived. Which period of time does it deal with? Is it historically accurate?

Language focus 2: Nouns in formal English

- Look at the following pairs of sentences. In each case the second sentence is an alternative way of expressing the first sentence, which appeared in the reading text above. What differences do you notice between each pair of sentences? Comment on the use of nouns and verbs.
  - a Smithey makes reference to the anti-immunization
    - b Smithey mentions indirectly the fact that they were generally against immunizing people.
  - 2 a Such journeys into the unknown often require a leap of
    - b When you set off like this and put yourself into new situations, you often have to believe that things will get better, even though you can't be sure of this.
- Nouns help to convey information clearly and concisely, and are far more frequent in formal written English than in conversation. For questions 1-4, use the information in a, which is more conversational, to complete the gaps in b, which is more formal.

Example:

- a I thought the painting was very simple and different to anything else I'd seen before. I was very impressed.
- b I was most impressed by the simplicity and originality of the painting.
- 1 a He applied for the job and he was clearly a bit disappointed when he heard they'd turned him down.

b	He was unable to hide his	at their rejection of his .	TO BE TO SERVE OF A SE

- 2 a The employees said they thought it would be a good idea if the company reduced the working day by just a little, but management said they didn't approve of the idea at all.
  - b Management voiced their strong employees' for a slight in the working day.
- 3 a I have to tell you that I'm not satisfied with the service you offer. I often have to wait a long time for things to get here, even though you say that you send them sooner than 24 hours after you receive an order.
  - with the standard b I must express my of your service. Delivery of goods is often subject to , despite your that orders are dispatched within 24 hours.
- 4 a People fail to understand how important it is to recycle waste, and I think it's because they don't know anything about the environment and they don't get taught enough about it at school.

b	People's	to understand the
	of recycling waste is th	e of a lack of environmental	and insufficient on the su	ubject.

3 In 1-4 in exercise 2, there are more verbs in a than in b, and more nouns in b than in a. What other differences do you notice between the language used in informal and formal registers?

Review

Which of these films (1-5) would you be most likely to watch? Why?

2 Read the following Part 2 task and the model answer.
Which film shown in the five posters do you think the review is describing?

You see the announcement below on a film review website called FilmScape.

The Past is Back

The film industry has often turned to history as a source of inspiration, but some of its attempts to bring the past to life have been better than others. Next month we'll be bringing you our top ten recommendations for historical films, and we welcome your suggestions.

So, send in a review which describes a historical film, explaining why it is worth watching, and in what ways it could have been better.

Write your review in 220-260 words.

that took place in the early 17th century when English settlers first made contact with Native Americans. The legendary story of Pocahontas, a powerful chief's daughter, and how she saved the life of John Smith, has been told many times in literature, song and film, but in this period piece, director Terrence Malick takes a more honest approach.

Smith, played by Colin Farrell, is portrayed as a fantasist; a man who ignores the brutality of the 'noble savages' and at the same time alienates his fellow Britons who are struggling to survive the harsh winter. As for Pocahontas (actress Q'Orianka Kilcher), the movie quite rightly implies that it is not love that makes her save Smith, but curiosity and empathy for the hardship this strange man faces. Indeed, the element of 'strangeness' is what really makes the film stand out. The Algonquin people and the Britons are shown regarding each other in complete wonder. There is a moving scene in which Smith and Pocahontas teach each other simple words; this sort of scenario often feels rather contrived, but here there is a genuine feeling of discovery.

This is a visually stunning epic, and skilfully avoids the usual stereotyping of Native Americans. However, if historical accuracy is what you are after, you may feel let down. Pocahontas is shown as a young woman, whereas in reality, she is said to have been ten years old when she first met Smith. Her later life in London also seems slightly idealized. All in all, a masterful film.

- 3 What is the purpose of each paragraph?
- 4 In your own words, say why the writer thinks the film is 'worth watching' and how it 'could have been better'.
- 5 Some sentences in the review use past forms of a verb and others use present forms. Underline four examples of each. Then decide why a present or past form is used.
- 6 Make a note of those adjectives used by the writer to express an opinion. Include any accompanying adverbs or nouns.

Example: spectacular dramatization

Divide the adjectives in section B on page 211 into two groups, positive and negative.

7 Complete each of the spaces with one of the nouns from the box.

4	Unfortunately, the film relies too heavily on special effects rather than character
5	It was let down by the usual of most action movies; the big speech just before the battle, for example.
6	My one to the movie is that the accents of the supporting cast are often unconvincing.
7	The end of the film is hardly based on Indeed, no survivors were ever found.

Don't forget!

Aim to grab the reader's interest from the beginning.

8 Now write your own answer to the task in 220–260 words.

Express your opinions throughout your answer.

Multiple matching 1.5–1.9

- You will hear five short extracts in which people are talking about changes in their lives.
- 2 To make your first Part 4 Listening easier, there are only six options, not eight, to choose from in each task.

What to expect in the exam

- Part 4 consists of a multiple-matching format in which there are five short monologues on the same theme.
- There are two connected tasks. For each task, you must choose five correct answers from a list of eight options.
- In the exam, you will have 45 seconds to read through the tasks.
- You hear all the extracts once, then the whole sequence is played again.

TASK ONE

For questions 1–5, choose from the list (A–F) what led to the change in the life of the speaker.

TASKTWO

For questions 6–10, choose from the list (A–F) how the speaker feels about this change.

While you listen you must complete both tasks.

Α	the desire to avoid unwanted attention	Speaker 1	1	Α	excited	Speaker 1	6
В	the desire to travel	Speaker 2	2	В	regretful	Speaker 2	7
С	the desire to maintain a positive relationship	Speaker 3	3	С	ashamed	Speaker 3	8
D	the desire to be challenged	20. [		D	scared	77
Ε	the desire to show other people were wrong	Speaker 4	4	E	grateful	Speaker 4	9
F	the desire to fulfil an ambition	Speaker 5	5	F	proud	Speaker 5	10

- Talk to your partner about a time in your life when something changed. Mention the following in relation to the change:
  - the reasons for it
  - · how easy or difficult it was
  - · your feelings before and afterwards
  - · other people's attitudes
  - the consequences of the change

Vocabulary: Changes

Example:

You might change your doctor if you moved house or if you weren't happy with the treatment you were receiving.

your doctor your name your mind your tune gear the subject sides places a tyre your ways

B Adjective + noun collocations

The following adjectives can all be used with the noun change.

Complete each of the sentences 1-4 with a suitable group of adjectives a-d. All of the adjectives in each group must be appropriate for the sentence you choose.

- a economic/political/social
- b dramatic/sudden/considerable
- c pleasant/refreshing/welcome
- d far-reaching/significant/sweeping
- 1 It made a/an _____ change to see Alex in a suit. He looked very smart for once.
- 2 The government has announced plans to make _____ changes to the tax system next year;
- 3 The pace of _____change has been rather slow in this country recently.
- 4 The lottery win brought about a/an _____ change in her circumstances, which she is finding it difficult to cope with.
- Rewrite sentences 1-4 so that they are true for you/your country/the world in general. Use the words in bold, together with an appropriate adjective. Compare your sentences with those of other students in your class.

C Other verbs of change

For questions 1–5 decide which word, A, B, C or D best fits each space. The verb you choose must be appropriate for the gaps in both sentences. The words in bold are typical collocates of the verb.

1		It took nim a v
	b	You can		_ the height o	f th	e chair by pu	ılling this lever here.
		A switch	В	alter	C	vary	D adjust
2	a	The old windn	nill ha	as been		_into a sma	ll guest house.

	b	I	shift	s with Brian so	Io	ould go to my	/ sister's wedding.
		A shifted	B	ewitched	C	transformer	I D altered

Language focus: Talking about the past

In 1–8, write one of the auxiliary verbs from the box in the first space and an appropriate verb in the correct form in the second space. Use each auxiliary verb once only. There is an example at the beginning (0).

	have	been	having	g had	would
7	was	were	has	did
0	The phone the house	e rang just a	as we	were	leaving
1	It was the abroad.	first time I

7	I'd have liked to have	a second chance, but it wasn't possible.
8	I wasn't allowed to see the film, but they me read the book.

Vocabulary: Changes

1 For 1-8, decide whether the meaning of the two items of vocabulary is more or less the same or different. Explain any differences in meaning.

Example:

- 0 transfer money/convert money Different. When you transfer money, you move it from one place to another, e.g. from one account to another. When you convert money, you change it from one currency to another.
- 1 adjust to university life/adapt to university life

3 Gathering information

Speaking Pan 2

Long turn 🔘

Look at these pictures. They show people who are trying to obtain information in different ways.

Student A:

Compare two of the pictures, and say what kind of information they might want to obtain, and why they might have chosen this way to obtain it.

Student B:

When your partner has finished talking, say which of these ways might provide the more reliable information.

- · What kind of information might these people want to obtain?
- · Why might they have chosen this way to obtain the information?

- Talk about the similarities and differences between the two pictures.
- Do not simply describe the pictures. Speculate about them as indicated in the instruction.
- Use a wide range of vocabulary including some of the verbs and adjectives in the Useful language section.

What to expect in the exam

- Each candidate is given three pictures and asked to compare two of them.
- Candidate A's instructions appear as written questions above the pictures.

Useful language

In 1 and 2 below, the adjectives and verbs in the boxes can all be used in the corresponding sentence. Mark each adjective P or N, according to whether it has a positive or negative meaning.

1 It is(n't) a very

Adjective efficient costly convenient unreliable frustrating cost-effective handy time-saving inexpensive rapid method/way of

Verb getting obtaining accessing finding gathering collecting information.

2 The information

Verb gathered compiled obtained accessed collected would/could/might be

Adjective (ir)relevant. (un)reliable. (in)accurate. (un)clear. (un)ambiguous. useful/useless. comprehensive. limited. up-to-date. misleading. vague.

Gathering information

Multiple choice 1.10-1.12

You will hear three different extracts. For questions 1–6, choose the answer (A, B or C) which fits best according to what you hear. There are two questions for each extract.

Extract One

You hear part of a radio discussion in which two writers are talking about their books.

- 1 How does the man feel about the last book he wrote?
  - A relieved that it has now been completed
  - B sorry that its scope could not be wider
  - C uncertain that it will have wide appeal
- 2 The woman says that using the Internet for research purposes
  - A has generally made things easier for writers.
  - B is a rather unreliable way of obtaining information.
  - C will not replace traditional methods of investigation.

You overhear two university students talking about choices they have made.

- 3 The man has decided to go to Greece in order to
  - A take some time to reflect on his career choices.
  - B carry out some research for his university course.
  - C take part in a project that needs volunteers.
- 4 What does the woman regret doing?
  - A starting a job as soon as her studies were over
  - B choosing a career that was not fulfilling
  - C failing to take her studies seriously enough

Extract Three

You hear two game designers talking about their work.

- 5 When beginning work on a new game, the first designer
  - A confers with others in the field.
  - B focuses mainly on character development.
  - C decides on an overall objective first.
- 6 Both speakers say that the best game designers
  - A have a wide range of interests beyond gaming.
  - B work with their fan base constantly in mind.
  - C experiment with multiple genres within the industry.

Is there an ideal time of life to attend university?

What makes some video games better than others?

Language focus 1: Hypothetical past situations

A Wish/If only and alternatives

Look at the following utterance from the first conversation in Listening 1.

If only we'd had (the Internet) when I was first starting out. If only is used to add emphasis to hypothetical situations. With past events it can also be used to express regret and/or criticism. Look at the following alternative ways of saying the same thing.

1 If only ...

2 | wish ...

she hadn't told him.

3 I'd rather/sooner ....

In each case:

- a Did she tell him?
- b How does the speaker feel about this?
- If the subject is the same in both parts of a sentence introduced by would rather, would sooner, would prefer to or would like to, a perfect infinitive is used when referring to the past, e.g.

I'd rather/sooner have seen it with subtitles. Wouldn't you? She'd prefer to have travelled on her own.

He'd like to have come, but he's very busy these days.

How does the meaning change if the present infinitive, see, travel and come, is used in these sentences?

Practice

For 1-6, complete the second sentence so that it has a similar meaning to the first sentence.

1 If only I'd gone to France instead. I'd sooner

2 1 do think you might have phoned earlier.

3 We don't think you should have done that. We'd rather

4 Don't you regret not going to university? Don't you wish

5 If only you'd mentioned it before! You should

6 Do you wish you had stayed longer? Would you like

B Past conditionals

Third conditional sentences can be used to talk about imaginary situations in the past, as in this example: If the police had received this information earlier, they might have had more success in solving the crime.

Here is a more formal way of expressing the underlined part of

Had the police received this information earlier, they might have had ...

2 Match each sentence beginning 1-6 with an appropriate ending, a-f.

Example: 1 c

- If she hadn't found his name on the Internet.
- Had I known it was going to rain so heavily.
- If it hadn't been for her quick thinking,
- If I didn't have three kids and a mortgage,
- If they hadn't lost their last three matches.
- 6 If I got into trouble at school.
- a she could have had a serious accident.
- b they'd be top of the league now.
- c they might never have seen each other again.
- my parents used to stop my pocket money.
- e I'd have given up this job a long time ago.
- I would have taken my waterproofs.
- 3 Look at the sentences in exercise 2 and answer these questions.
  - 1 Which sentences are third conditionals?
  - Which sentences include a combination of past and present time reference (mixed conditionals)?
  - 3 Which sentence uses the past simple to refer to past time?

Read more about the points in sections A and B opposite in Part A of the Grammar reference on pages 216 and 217.

Practice

Rewrite the ideas expressed in the following sentences using the structures studied in A and B opposite. Write one sentence for each situation, using a different structure each time.

We didn't get back in time to see him. It was a real shame. If only we'd got back in time to see him.

- He didn't revise for his exams. He regrets this now.
- 2 I didn't take any books with me on holiday. I got really bored.
- 3 It's a good job Steve was there. Thanks to him we were able to get the car started.
- 4 My parents bought me an iPod. An iPad would have been better.
- 5 I couldn't see the film on telly last night. That was a pity -I really wanted to.
- 6 My French isn't very good. That's probably why I didn't get
- 7 They showed us all their holiday snaps. I was hoping to watch the football.

With a partner write a six-line dialogue. The first or last line of the dialogue must be one of these sentences.

I wish you'd told the truth.

I'd rather you hadn't lent it to him. If only you'd been there - it was so funny. I'd love to have seen his face when he found out. If it hadn't been for your stupidity, we wouldn't be in this mess.

Read your dialogue to another pair of students, but do not read out the sentence from exercise 2. Can the other students guess which sentence you chose?

Your report should

- · describe some of the positive and negative aspects of two different forms of advertising in your country.
- · say how effective these advertising methods are.
- suggest one or two changes which could be introduced to counter the negative aspects.

Write your report in 220-260 words.

Writing

A

Introduction

The aim of this report is to outline the positive and negative features of two different forms of advertising in my country, namely roadsize hoardings and panners trailed by light aircraft it will also consider the effectiveness of these methods and make recommandations for improvements.

Advertising hourdings

Press add a couch of colour and sometimes humount orun otherwise drab urban landscapes. Moreover, the size of the posters and the cithiness of the accompanying slogans attract the attention of passers-by and help make the advertisements memoratis.

Unfortunately, however, no ardings are also to be found in rural areas, whore they appear unsightly and are clearly out of place. In addition, the advertisements can lead drivers to lose their concentration momentarily and are a relatively common cause of acoldents.

Aeroplane advertising

Equally distracting are banners attached to light a roraft, which fly for extended periods over our built-up areas and popular coastal resorts. Furthermore, the noise is a considerable source of irritation to local residents and the consumption of large quantities of air fuel can only be harmful to the environment.

On the other hand, aeroplane banners are currently enjoying great success here as an adverticing medium. This is largely due to the originality of the approach and its difference from mainstream alternatives.

Recommendations

To discourage noise, air and visual pollution, I would recommend restricting the location of hoardings to towns and cities and limiting the amount of flying time for advertising aircraft. Additionally, smaller noardings might reduce the risk of accidents caused by distracted drivers.

B

in this report I'm going to describe some of this positive and negative aspects of two different forms of advertising, say how effective these advertising methods are and suggestions or two changes which could be introduced to counter the negative aspects.

Advertising hoardings are very colourful and sometimes very furny, and they look good in our sad, grey after. And they're very big, too, with interesting sleggars and that makes coop's look at them and remember them.

But you get them in the countryside, too. They look ugly and I don't think they should be there. They also cause accidents because people look at them when they to driving.

Banners pulled by small seroplanes also cause accidents. The aeroplanes fly for a long time over the cities and beaches. They're noisy too and that irritates people and they use up a lot of potrol. That's bad for the endronment.

But banners like this are very successful here because they're original and different from the typical advertising techniques.

I think they should make it illegal to have hoardings in the countrys de and not let aeroplanes with bunners fly for very long.

Ther would stee all the noise, the pollution and the ugly views. And hoeraings should be smaller because then they might not distract drivers and cause accidents.

2 The content of the two answers is roughly the same, but the type of language used is very different. Work with your partner.

Comment on the following features in each answer:

- linking devices
- · number of nouns
- · types of adjective

What other differences do you notice?

Find examples in A of how the writer makes reference to his/her country.

3 Now write your own answer to the task on page 34.

How to go about it

- Decide on the two forms of advertising. Choose from TV, radio, the Internet, mailshots, telephone, newspapers and magazines, filers, transport, sports events or any other medium used in your country.
- For each method, note down your ideas in four separate columns: Positive aspects, Negative aspects, Effectiveness, Recommendations.
- Look at the adjectives in section C on page 209 and decide which, if any, will be relevant to your answer.
- Decide how you will organize your ideas into paragraphs. The paragraph structure in the two sample answers is one possibility. How else could you structure your report?
- Write your report using a consistently formal style. Aim to use a wide range of vocabulary and a greater number of nouns than verbs.

Gathering information

Multiple choice 1.13

Do you know where the following languages are spoken?

Ladin Provençal Frisian Galego Sami Breton

2 You will hear a woman called Helena Drysdale being interviewed about her research for a book on minority languages. For questions 1-6, choose the answer (A, B, C or D) which fits best according to what you hear.

What to expect in the exam

Part 3 of the Listening paper always contains six multiple-choice questions about a conversation or interview between two or more speakers. The recording lasts approximately four minutes.

- 1 The main purpose of Helena's journey was to
  - A establish precisely where Europe's minority languages are spoken.
  - B investigate the effects of climate and location on language.
  - C calculate the exact number of minority languages in Europe.
  - D assess the current condition of Europe's minority languages.
- 2 One problem of living in the mobile home was that
  - A there wasn't much space,
  - B the children had nowhere to play.
  - C it became very hot.
  - D they all got bored with each other.
- 3 What does Helena say about the people she met?
  - A Not all of them spoke a minority language.
  - B Some were more willing than others to express their views.
  - C Intellectuals gave more biased information than other people.
  - D Older people had a rather unbalanced view of the situation.
- 4 We learn that people who were punished for speaking Provençal
  - A did not take their punishment seriously.
  - B felt they were treated unfairly.

Language focus 2: Present and future conditionals

 Match each of the conditional sentences from the listening with one of the explantions a—c.

Zero conditional:

If you cut (a tree back), it grows much stronger.

First conditional:

If no positive action is taken, they'll simply die out.

Second conditional:

If you spoke a different language, you'd be a different person.

- a an imaginary situation in the present or future
- b a possible future situation and its probable result
- a situation which is always true
- Look at the following alternative structures to those used in two of the above examples from the listening.

First conditional

If + happen tolshould makes an event seem more unlikely, or more of a chance possibility.

If I happen to ...

see anything I think she might like for her birthday, I'll buy it.

If I should (happen to) ...

In more formal contexts, the following inversion is possible:

Should you require any further information, please do not hesitate to contact us.

Second conditional

 A If + were to + verb also makes an event seem more unlikely.

If I were to tell the boss what you've just said, he'd probably sack you.

Again, an inversion is possible in formal contexts: Were you to accept our proposal, some funding would be made available to you.

B Compare the following two structures. Which refers to the present and which to the past?

If it weren't for my dog, I'd probably go away more. If it hadn't been for his time in prison, he might have got the job.

- C Supposing/Suppose/Imagine can all be used instead of if, especially in everyday speech.
  Imagine you lost your job. What would you do?
- 3 For 1–6 opposite, find one unnecessary word in each sentence or pair of sentences. The word is either grammatically incorrect or does not fit in with the sense of the sentence(s).

Example:

If you would have enough time, will you help me to clean the garage out?

- If it weren't broken for my leg, I'd definitely run in the London Marathon next month.
- 2 It's very unlikely you'll see her at the concert, but if you should happen bump into her, give her my regards, won't you?
- 3 She's always moaning about him I wouldn't be in the least bit surprised if she would split up with him soon.
- 4 I know you don't think there's much chance of it happening, but just if suppose you did win first prize. How do you think you'd spend all that money?
- 5 Imagine that you came face to face with a bull: what might be the sensible thing to do? Would you have run away, for example?
- 6 We'd have to come to some sort of decision ourselves if the meeting were to put off for any reason.

If + will/would/going to

In some situations if can be followed by will, would or going to in the same clause. Match each of the functions in the box with one of the sentences 1–5, according to the idea expressed in the if clause. The exercise begins with an example (0).

> Willingness Refusal Request Intention Insistence Result

- If you'll come this way, Ms Taylor will see you now. Request
- If you will keep eating chocolate, it's no wonder you're putting on weight.
- If you won't turn your music down, we'll just have to call the police.
- 3 If it'll help you relax, I'll get you a drink or something.
- 4 If we're going to go for a walk, I think we should leave now.
- 5 If you would just let me explain, I'm sure you'd change your mind.
- Choose three of the sentences in exercise 1 and for each one rewrite the second clause (the part after the comma). Ask your partner to match each of the new sentence halves to an appropriate if clause in exercise 1.

Example:

0 ... I'll show you where the lift is.

Read more about present and future conditionals in Part B of the Grammar reference on page 217.

Gapped text

In what ways is smell an important source of information?

Think of three smells which are in some way important to you, and tell your partner about them. Do you like the smells? Do they bring back any memories?

What precautions would you need to take if you had no sense of smell?

You are going to read an extract from a newspaper article. Six paragraphs have been removed from the extract. Choose from the paragraphs A-G the one which fits each gap (1-6). There is one extra paragraph which you do not need to use.

- Before you start to make any choices, read through the base text (the main text with the gaps) and answer the following question:
  - How can people's lives be effected by having no sense of smell?
- Read all the missing paragraphs and then try to decide where each one should go. (Remember, there is one extra paragraph.) Some parts of the article have been underlined to help you.
  - When making your choices, be sure to look at the information both before and after the gap. Underline those parts of the missing paragraphs which help you reach your decision.
- Finally, check your answers by reading the whole article again to ensure that it makes sense. Check that the extra paragraph does not fit into any of the gaps.

SCENTS AND SENSITIVITY

She has never known the fragrance of a beautiful flower – or been able to tell by sniffing whether food is safe to eat. Lucy 30 Mangan on being born with no sense of smell

I am not a fully sentient being. I am referring to the fact that 5 Lam congenitally anosmic; or, as I more helpfully put it when people thrust perfumed articles under my nose and invite an opinion on the arama, I was born without a sense of smell.

That experience, however, does not compare to the time I was persuaded by school friends that as I couldn't smell Emma 10 Webster's perfume, I should drink it. This was, I recall, on the grounds that toste and smell are so closely linked that it would give me at least some idea of the delicious scent I was missing. Alas, all it taught me was that perfume is not a beverage, and I was left feeling sick for days

15 I had enough sense to buy a smoke alarm, but it wasn't until my sister called round and nearly collapsed from the smell of a hab burner I had accidentally switched on that I realized I needed a detector that would alert me aurally to gas leaks before I blew up the street. A few bouts of food poisoning 20 alerted me to the fact that I can eat food which would cause those with functioning nasal passages to call in the public health authorities. I now check best before dates assiduously and treat three-day-old milk with the respect it deserves.

I subscribe to the 'what you've never had, you never miss' 25 school of thought, but for those who lose their sense of smell, the effect on their quality of life can be enormous. Professor Tim Jacob at Cardiff University, who researches olfaction, explains 'Anosmics will have found other ways of adapting, using texture and consistency to get information about food. But people who once relied on their sense of smell do not know how to cape without it."

And those are just the obvious things. As Jacob also notes: You lose lots of subliminal information and links with the emotional centres of the brain. Smells are inextricably linked 35 with memories and form the backdrop to your sensory experience. The smell of your first girlfriend's perfume or boyfriend's aftershave, anything associated with strong emotion, will always trigger a rush of memory."

Alarmed at the thought of producing sickly babies, I enquire about treatment. For those who have lost their sense of smell through infection or damage, the news is relatively good. They usually regain some ability because the olfactory nerve is capable of regeneration,' says David Roberts, ear, nose and throat consultant at Guy's & St Thomas's Hospital 45 in London.

will have to soldier on, and draw what comfort I can from a recent exchange with an ex-baylriend who, as we reminisced about our relationship said wistfully. You were the best 50 girlfriend in the world. You let me cat all the garlic I wanted and it didn't bother you' I'm putting it in my next personal ad.

- A Naturally, the problems of being alfactorily-challenged don't compare to those which attend blindness or deafness. Nevertheless, certain things do have to be taken into account, and certain precautions taken, which you only fully appreciate when you start living alone.
- B The tangue can only distinguish the four basic tastes: bitter, sweet, salty, sour. Smell detects flavour and nuance, so they lose all significant sense of taste. About 17% become dinically depressed. Some become aversensitive about having body adour and are frightened of going out.
- Steroid-based drug treatments can help further. Nasal polyps causing blockages to alfactory passageways can be treated medically and surgically. But, as one might expect, less can be done to rectify causes one is born with.
- "It's a very emotive sense," he explains. The nerves stimulated by smell send messages to one of the oldest, most primitive parts of our brain, which is why it's so integral to our lives and why people feel they cannot do without it."

- It took until I was seven to convince my mother of this.

  She reluctantly acknowledged the truth of my claim ofter making me sniff the fumes from her bottle of nail varnish remover until I looked up hopefully and said 'My eyes are burning is that what you mean?'
- F I am beginning to feel quite intrigued by this unknown world of smells taking you back in time, but this quickly deepens into concern about what else I am missing. 'And, of course, you are attracted to people who smell different from you, because it suggests they have a different immunotype,' says Jacob. 'It's the evolutionary system trying to get you to pass on two sets of immunity advantages to your offspring.'
- G I have also learnt to stock my shelves with visitors as well as myself in mind. So I have fruit teas in the house even though they appear to be nothing more than an expensive way of colouring a mugful of hot water, and herbs, even though they are a matter of supreme indifference to me. When I cook for other people and a recipe says 'season to taste', I have to hope for the best.

Ready for Use of English

Introduction

In the Reading and Use of English paper, you have 90 minutes to complete eight different tasks. In this unit, we will look at three of the four Use of English tasks:

Part 1 Multiple-choice cloze

Part 3 Word formation

Part 4 Key word transformation

We will look at the four Reading tasks, Parts 5-8, on pages 82-89.

Part 1: Multiple-choice cloze

- 1 a What effects do you think noise might have on the behaviour of birds that live in towns and cities?
  - b Read the text below, ignoring the gaps, and compare your ideas
- 2 For questions 1-8, read the text below and decide which answer (A, B, C or D) best fits each gap. There is an example at the beginning (0)

Twitter in the city

Part 3: Word formation

What to expect in the exam

Part 3 contains a text with eight gaps, each of which has to be filled with the correct form of a word given in capital letters. In the example below, the infinitive form of the verb is needed after the modal can. The missing words are usually nouns, adjectives, adverbs and occasionally verbs. Sometimes the words you write will need to be in the plural, and sometimes a negative form is required. The meaning of the text surrounding the gaps will help you to decide.

1 For questions 1-8, read the text below. Use the word given in capitals at the end of some of the lines to form a word that fits in the gap in the same line. Use the words in bold to help you to decide on the correct form of your answer. There is an example at the beginning (0). Write your answers IN CAPITAL LETTERS.

Then read the text again and for questions 1–8, use the word given in capitals at the end of some of the lines to form a word that fits in the gap in the same line.

Part 4: Key word transformation

For questions 1–6, complete the second sentence so that it has a similar meaning to the first sentence, using the word given. Do not change the word given. You must use between three and six words, including the word given. Write your answers IN CAPITAL LETTERS.

What to expect in the exam

- Part 4 requires you to use a range of structures to express ideas in different ways. You are tested on your knowledge of both lexis and grammar.
- The key word might be part of a collocation, a phrasal verb or a set phrase. It might relate to a particular grammar point or it could be a synonym or antonym of a word in the first sentence.
- When you complete each gap, pay attention to the correct use of verb patterns, prepositions, negatives, conjunctions and so on.
- Answer the questions in ftalics after each pair of sentences before you complete the task. Questions like these will not appear in the exam.

  - Read more about punctuation in the Grammar reference on page 217.

3 Punctuate the following newspaper article on working trends in Britain. Add capital letters where necessary.

HOME-WORKING

if you had the choice would you prefer to work from home or in an office British workers seem to be in no doubt one in four of them has given up commuting to the office in favour of a more domestic working environment and the figure is growing

the number of home-workers is likely to increase by more than 50% over the next five years claimed a spokesperson for Datamonitor the London-based market research company as a result of this trend consumers will spend a great deal less on certain goods and services transport petrol eating out and drinks moreover because home-workers usually take fewer showers the sale of personal care products such as deodorants and soap will also be affected the study which shows that home-workers tend to be the more highly qualified professionals in a company says that firms are in danger of losing their best employees if they do not allow home-working unfortunately however there are some who abuse the trust which has been placed in them Datamonitor discovered that many like to watch television listen to the radio and browse social networking sites while they work

- 4 Check your answer with the suggested version.
- 5 What are the advantages and disadvantages of home working?

Would you prefer to work from home?

Multiple matching 1.14–1.18

1 What advice would you give to someone going for a job interview?

Example: Dress smartly.

You will hear five short extracts in which people are talking about interviews they attended.

How to go about it

- Read through both tasks carefully before you start to listen. Note that in Task One, you are listening for the advice the person received, not what they actually did.
- Try to predict the language you might hear for each prompt.
   Example:

A mind your body language - the way you sit or stand; what you do with your arms, hands and legs.

- Concentrate mainly, but not exclusively, on Task One the first time you listen. The second time you listen, give more attention to Task Two.

If you have never had an interview, tell your partner what you would fear most about going for an interview and what you would do to overcome this fear.

Language focus 2: Gerunds and infinitives

A Review

The following sentences are all from the listening. Discuss with your partner the reasons why the words underlined are in the gerund or the infinitive.

Example:

- 1 The noun 'way' is often followed by the infinitive. 'Going' is in the gerund because it follows the preposition 'by'; all prepositions take the -ing form of a verb.
- The best way to prepare for an interview is by going to the company's website.
- 2 They can see you've done your homework.
- 3 You're not to get all uptight and on edge.
- 4 Projecting self-confidence at an interview is vital for success.
- 5 I put on my best suit to give me that confidence.
- 6 I think I managed to hide it.
- 7 It's advisable to lean forward.
- 8 They recommended imagining the interviewer in the bath.

B Common problems

1 In 1—8 below, there is a mistake in one of the two sentences. Find the mistake and correct it.

Example: feeling

- You can't help to feel sorry for John, losing his job like that.
- b The company says it'll help him to find another, but it's not the same.
- 1 a Thave been made to feel very welcome in my new job.
  - b They even let me to leave early so I can pick up my son from school.
- 2 a It's taken me time to adjust to working in an open-plan office.
  - I still can't get used to share the same working space with the boss.
- 3 a It's not worth to make an effort in my job the pay is so low.
  - b And there's certainly no point taking work home at weekends.
- 4 a We appreciate your agreeing to give a talk at the conference.
- We would like that you are our guest for dinner after your talk.
- 5 a As soon as I get to work all the phones start ringing.
  - b They don't stop to ring all day.
- 6 a I don't mind to go to the office meal tonight, ...

- 7 a Ladvised him to buy a new suit for his interview.
  - b I also recommended to have a haircut.
- 8 a We were to have received a pay rise this year.
- Management have admitted to have broken their promise to increase salaries.
- Check your ideas in the Grammar reference on page 218.

- Work with a partner. Talk to each other about something
  - you would miss being able to do if you lived abroad.
  - you would refuse to do under any circumstances.
  - you remember doing when you were a very small child.
  - you are planning to do in the next few months.
  - · you regret doing.
  - your parents didn't let you do as a child.
  - you always have difficulty doing.
  - you often forget to do.

C Nouns followed by the infinitive

Each of the nouns in the box can be followed by the infinitive with to. For each question 1–5, use the information in the informal sentence a to complete the gaps in the formal sentence b, using the words in the box. You should use each word once only.

Writing

Essay

What to expect in the exam

roleplaying job interviews

In Part 1 of the Writing paper, you are asked to write an essay in response to a proposition and an accompanying input text. The input text will take the form of notes made during a seminar, lecture, panel discussion or documentary. Your essay should be written in a formal and persuasive style. You will be asked to write between 220-260 words.

- Read the following Essay task and answer the questions below:
  - a Who is your target reader?
  - b How many of the listed methods do you need to write about?
  - c What else do you have to do in your essay?
  - d Whose opinions are quoted?
  - e What is the connection between the listed methods and the three opinions?
  - f Is it necessary to refer to the three opinions?
  - g What do you need to persuade the target reader about?

Your class has recently watched a TV documentary on what methods governments should use to encourage young people to pursue further education. You have made the notes below:

Methods governments

should use to encourage young people to pursue further education

- · e-learning
- work placements
- cheaper fees

Some opinions expressed in the TV documentary:

'Nowadays, people should be able to study from home."

There should be some guarantee of a job at the end of the course."

'Maybe young people would go to college if they could afford it."

Write an essay for your tutor discussing two of the methods in your notes. You should explain which method you think is more important for governments to consider, giving reasons in support of your answer.

You may, if you wish, make use of the opinions expressed in the TV documentary, but you should use your own words as far as possible.

2 Read the model answer and answer the following question.
Which of the listed methods does the writer suggest is more important?

Encouraging school-leavers to take college courses

Over the last ten years there has been a rise in the number of teens finishing their studies at age 16 or 17. Statistics indicate that they are opting to leave school as early as possible, either because they are unable or unwilling to take their education further. It is clear that this could have a long-term impact on the skills, knowledge and qualifications of the general workforce. It is therefore essential that governments find ways to reverse this trend.

We need to begin by asking why young people do not see college as a good option. A major factor is certainly the cost. For many low-income families, course fees, materials and equipment are simply unaffordable. Reducing fees would therefore enable many more students to attend college. However, for the government to do this, it would need to use a very large part of its total budget for education, year after year.

It might be a more practical solution to offer young people more flexibility in when and how they study. If governments supported colleges in developing online courses and blended learning programmes, more young people could study at a time and place that was convenient to them. Students with daytime jobs, for instance, could choose to do their coursework and view workshops or online webinars in the evening or weekends.

Serring up these kinds of programme would be expensive at first, but once the courses were established, it would be a cost-effective approach. Now we have the technology, we should use it to maximize educational opportunities for the young generation.

3 Which of the three possible paragraph plans, A, B or C, does the essay follow?

A

Introduction:

Explain reasons for young people not pursuing further education.

Central paragraphs:

Explain the advantages and disadvantages of two proposed methods.

State my own opinion about which method is better.

Conclusion:

Summarizing statement

B

Introduction:

Describe effect of young people not pursuing further education and outline methods to be discussed.

Central paragraphs:

Describe one method and give reasons why government should consider it.

Describe second method and say why it might also be considered. Conclusion:

Weigh up arguments given and state opinion. Give reason(s).

(

Introduction:

Provide general information about the current trend regarding young people and further education. Indicate purpose of essay.

Central paragraphs:

Discuss one proposed method and suggest why it may not be effective.

Discuss second method and give reasons why the government should consider it.

Conclusion:

Reaffirm why one method is preferable to the other.

4 a The following structures from the model in exercise 2 could be used in other essays you write:

b Four different modal verbs are used in the model. Which are they?

5 Read the Part 1 task below and write your essay.

Your class has recently attended a panel discussion on what methods governments should use to prepare young people for working life. You have made the notes below:

Methods governments should use to prepare young people for working life

- · apprentice schemes
- work-related subjects at school
- visits from employers

Some opinions expressed in the panel discussion:

Young people should balance their academic studies with practical experience in a job.'

'Schools must teach things like money management and interview techniques.'

'Maybe kids would choose the right job if they really knew what it was about."

Write an essay for your tutor in 220-260 words discussing two of the methods in your notes. You should explain which method you think is more practical for governments to propose, giving reasons in support of your answer.

You may, if you wish, make use of the opinions expressed in the discussion, but you should use your own words as far as possible.

- There are always three points to choose from in Part 1 writing tasks. Decide which two you want to discuss.
- Decide what ideas relating to these two general points you want to explore. Here are some possible ideas for the three methods proposed in this question:
  - apprentice schemes: school students go to work for one day during the week, the job should be related to their studies, etc.
  - work-related subjects at school: filling in forms, practising interview techniques, learning about money management, etc.
  - visits from employers: presentations, question-and-answer sessions, opportunities to visit the employer's company, etc.
- Organize your ideas into logical paragraphs.
  - For this question, follow paragraph plan C in exercise 3. Note that you could put the more important method in either paragraph two or three, and the same applies for the method which is not so practical.
- Write your essay using a range of vocabulary and structures Use some of the language you have seen in this writing section.
- Make sure you support your opinions with reasons.

Cross-text multiple matching

What 'office politics' situations do the pictures below show?

Have you ever been involved in similar situations at school or work?

What other 'office politics' situations might exist in some companies?

What do you think might be the best way to deal with them?

You are going to read four extracts from articles about office politics. For questions 1-4, choose from the extracts A-D. The extracts may be chosen more than once.

How to go about it

- Read the rubric, the title and the subtitle carefully.
   What is the central theme of the four texts?
- Read the four questions and identify the key information to focus on.
   Underline relevant words in the questions. The first one has been done for you.
- Quickly read each of the four texts to get an idea of what each one is about.
- Read each text more carefully to locate a reference to each of the four questions.

  For question 1, the references to the role of managers in text A have been underlined. Now do the same for texts B, C and D.
- Identify the opinion that each writer has on each question and compare it to that of the other writers.
   Which writer has a different opinion from the others on the appropriate role of managers in dealing with office politics? (This will be the answer to question 1.)

Office Politics

Four writers talk about problems at work and how they should be resolved

At surface level, the subject of office politics may appear to be a trivial one; images arise of gossiping staff at the photocopier, intra-department emails taking exception to a colleague's time off for childcare commitments, the new assistant manager being given the cold shoulder

- because of his new dress code policy. Yet all these situations may have a profound impact on the workplace dynamics of any business or industry. Unfortunately, office politics is an area that a number of department heads admit to ignoring, in the vain hope that problems will resolve themselves. Although it is not advisable for them to intervene directly.
- 10 they do need to get Human Resources involved immediately.

It is because office politics has such an impact on company morale and productivity that business leaders must keep their ear to the ground and be alert to potential problems. I should, at this point, set out what I mean by office politics. We are not talking here about minor concerns such as arguments over the timekeeping of workmates, but rather how people will spread blame and employ deception to advance their own interests. By no means is this kind of behaviour common to all workplaces, although it appears to be endemic in television production, banking and advertising. Once they are alert, on no account should a department head or other person in authority approach the individuals concerned in a particular 'office politics' situation. Instead, the matter should be dealt with, at least as a first step, by Human Resources, who must be equipped with clear policies.

Despite the fact that office politics occurs in all kinds of business, owners and department heads are often irritated whenever the suspicion arises that there are conflicts between staff members. Research suggests that in many cases, they will just turn a blind eye to such situations. This may not matter so much when it comes to petty gossip about the social lives of colleagues outside of work, for example, and besides, this sort of problem does not really fit within the category of office politics. However, when employees are dishonest, taking credit for the work of others or pointing the finger when a mistake is their own, we are dealing with the kind of situation that needs a strong response, which, in the first instance, must be from Human Resources or an intermediary. If senior managers step in before proper procedures have been followed, they risk being accused of favouritism.

Over the last decade, my research team and I have studied a range of workplaces with office politics issues, from small family-run enterprises to vast corporations. We have found indisputable evidence that swift and direct intervention by immediate superiors is the most effective way to stop minor issues amongst juniors from getting out of hand and escalating into major crises. Indeed, many of the staff we surveyed said that this approach to dealing with conflict played a large role in maintaining their overall job satisfaction. Essentially, it appears that staff are less likely to bear a grudge against fellow employees or managers when they perceive that a problem has been dealt with in an open and frank manner. Conversely, when they perceive that others have been talking about them behind their backs, resentment is likely to remain. Interestingly enough, these attitudes were held by both long-term employees and more recently-appointed ones.

Which writer

has a different opinion from the others on the appropriate role of managers in dealing with office politics?

shares writer B's view regarding the definition of office politics?

expresses a different view from the others regarding the extent to which office politics exists in companies?

takes a similar view to writer C on the attitudes of some managers towards office politics?

Reacting to the text

Some of the writers suggest that people in authority should intervene when there is a dispute or bad feeling between colleagues or people within the same peer group. Do you think this is the right approach? What might it depend upon?

Key word transformation

For questions 1-6, complete the second sentence so that it has a similar meaning to the first sentence, using the word given. Do not change the word given. You must use between three and six words, including the word given. Here is an example (0). Write your answers IN CAPITAL LETTERS.

0 The man is armed and you should not approach him under any circumstances. ACCOUNT

The man is armed and ON NO ACCOUNT SHOULD you approach him.

In this exercise, all of the target language can be found in the article Office Politics.

- Match the key information in the lead in sentence with the information in the second sentence. Then decide what information is still missing from the second sentence – and how the key word can supply
- It is important to be accurate. For example, if the key word is a verb, you need to remember if it takes a preposition, and whether it is followed by the gerund or infinitive. If the key word is a noun, you may need to think of the verb that collocates with it.

Don't forget!

- Do not change the word given in capital letters.

MOTHERHOOD'S BEST-KEPT SECRET

One night, not so long ago, just as I was drifting off in bed, the phone rang. It was my 19-year-old son, who is at university in Edinburgh, calling to say that he had broken up with his girlfriend and had been wandering around the city ever since, not knowing what to do. I told him to catch the first train home. He arrived looking a wreck, but after a good sleep and some home cooking, he began to feel his old.

Girls I knew then were reasonably open with their mothers, but that was a mother-daughter thing. No male confernporary would ever have admitted asking his mother for advice. Despite all our talk about how important it was for men to let down their defences and learn how to express their feelings, most of us still secretly subscribed to the idea that any man who depended on his mother too much was a bit of a mummy's boy.

But things don't work that way anymore. In a world of short-term contracts, downsizing and redundancy, even the most promising of our children experience lows early on in their careers; and whenever they hit those depths, many of them will return to the rest. Indeed, a typical son will continue to be at least partly dependent on his mother well into his twenties.

They're also better able to see through the mask of apparent self-confidence. When my boy was growing up, he always maintained a fairly invincible front. His early imaginary play involved sleges, ambushes and surprise attacks. His starting point, though, was always a danger against which he needed to defend himself. He used the games he played as a child to convince himself that he could prevail.

In his teens, he used many of these same tricks to keep me at bay. If I drove him anywhere to meet his triends, he insisted I drop him off out of sight of where they were waiting. There were girlfriends I never met and phone conversations which were all 40 in code. But occasionally, a confidential mood would come over him and he would air whatever happened to be on his mind.

And there's another important change, she adds. Most of us took pains to reassure our sons that it

45 was OK for them to show physical affection or cry. If our boys are not so anxious now about showing their emotions, our efforts in this area have not been in vain. This seems to be backed up by research, which shows that boys call their mothers on their

5) mobile phones more than anyone else.

What I didn't anticipate was for the same thing to happen with my son. I assumed I would lose him, just like all the experts said. It may be that they were wrong all along – that sons have always confided in their mothers – and just made sure that no one else knew. Have I stumbled on motherhood's bost-kept secret? Even if I have, it doesn't diminish my sense of wonder. It's still like getting a present you never expected.

- A These days, however, mothers can expect to be relied on almost indefinitely for the type of advice that calls on our experience of the outside world. A generation ago, it was accepted that sons would eventually leave their mothers to join the world of men and work. Mothers put their 18 years in and then opened the door to allow their sons to move into jobs for life.
- B Other mothers told me that they, too, were getting the same volume of confidences. According to my psychotherapist friend, this is normal behaviour for today's boys. Our sons will tell us more than their fathers told their mothers, because we have brought them up to do so. Our norm has been to empathize with children when they talk about their feelings. whereas the previous generation tended to be shocked.
- C They are not in any doubt about how to respond to the situation. As one friend said of her rather reticent son: 'My job is to give my son courage.' And whilst we might welcome the chance to see more of our children, one does have the feeling that there is something antinatural in all this.
- D Many mothers I know are surprised at this reluctance to break away. One of my friends,

- however, who happens to be a psychotherapist, assures me that the mother-son intimacy is nothing new. 'Mums have always been easier to talk to," she points out. 'They're more cuddly than their fathers, and sons realize early on that their mothers are more accepting of human frailty."
- But don't assume that girls are any tougher than boys, 'Daughters need their mothers, too,' she says. Certainly, I know how much my own daughters need me. But this continuing mother-daughter bond is something I expected.
- Some of the details began to emerge on the following day. Then he told me more. And more. And even more. A moment arrived when I couldn't help asking myself, should I be hearing all of this? It wasn't that I was shocked. He reminded me of myself in my own student years, but with one important difference - I would never have confided in my parents this way.
- As he got older and had to ride to school on a bus with other children, all too often there were situations in which he did not. I had to teach him how to put up new defences so that his rougher classmates would not see his weaknesses.

Reacting to the text

To what extent have parent-children relationships changed in recent decades in your own country? Is the relationship very different for sons and daughters?

Vocabulary 1: Verb + noun collocations

Record the verbs in your notebook, together with the noun which follows each one.

Language focus 1: Reference and ellipsis

A Reference

- 1 Find the following sentences in the reading text on pages 60 and 61 and decide what the words in bold refer to. Sentences a–d can be found in the paragraph of the base text immediately after the number given in brackets.
  - a Girls I knew then were reasonably open with their mothers. (1)
  - b But things don't work that way anymore. (2)
  - In his teens, he used many of these same tricks to keep me at bay. (4)
  - d ... our efforts in this area have not been in vain. (5)
  - According to my psychotherapist friend, this is normal behaviour for today's boys. (paragraph B)
  - f Our sons will tell us more than their fathers told their mothers, because we have brought them up to do so. (paragraph B)
- Words such as do so in f above are often called 'substitute words'; they substitute and avoid repetition of words and phrases which have already been used.
  In 1–6 below, underline the correct substitute word. There is an example at the beginning (0).
  - O She can't sing and so/not/nor/never can I.
  - A Do you think the weather will clear up by tomorrow?
     B I certainly hope it/this/so/will.
  - 2 Can you lend me your helmet? If yes/so/not/no, don't worry I'll borrow Mike's.
  - 3 A Elaine wants to go to the beach.
  - B | I want/golam/do, too.
    4 | Last Christmas it was orange trousers; this year she gave
  - me these yellow pairlonesitypesicolour!
     Students passing the exam will automatically go into the next level. All thoseitheseithemiones that fail will have to repeat this same/suchionelalso.
  - 6 Suddenly, Brenda appeared. Such/Then/When/This was the moment he had been waiting for.

B Ellipsis

(paragraph G)

- Sometimes, to avoid repetition, it is enough to simply omit a word or words. This is called ellipsis. Find the following sentences in the text and decide which word or words have been omitted.

- 2 In 1–6 below, decide which words could be omitted to avoid repetition. There is an example at the beginning (0).
  - My brother was afraid of the dark, but I wasn't afraid of the dark.
  - 1 A Do you think you'll be home before midnight?
    - B I should be home before midnight.
  - 2 Lasked him to play a tune on the piano and he said he didn't want to play a tune on the piano.
  - 3 She always comes to class on Tuesdays, but she hardly ever comes to class on Thursdays.
  - 4 He left without saying goodbye. I have no idea why he left without saying goodbye.
  - 5 A I have a feeling he was sacked from his last job.
    - B Yes, he might well have been sacked from his last job.
  - 6 He told me to apologize to her, but I'd already apologized to her.

Read more about reference and ellipsis in the Grammar reference on pages 218 and 219.

3 Use substitute words and ellipsis to reduce the amount of repetition in the following text. There is an example at the beginning.

A family of teachers

For most of my mother's working life my mother taught chemistry in a secondary school. She always said the reason she had entered the teaching profession was because her father had virtually forced her to enter the teaching profession. Her father was a teacher and her mother was a teacher as well, though she herself had no intention of becoming a teacher. However, whereas my grandmother felt that my mother should only follow in their footsteps if my mother wanted to follow in their footsteps, my grandfather was determined that she should teach for a living – so she taught for a living.

She'd actually like to flavo become a pharmacist and run her own business, but she wasn't sufficiently qualified to become a pharmacist and have her own business. Apart from the fact that she wasn't sufficiently well qualified, she might, well have had problems raising the necessary capital, and if she'd asked her father to lend her the necessary capital he probably wouldn't have lent her the necessary capital. I think my mother resented my grandfather for the pressure my grandfather had out on her, and my mother always encouraged me to make my own decisions. I made my own decisions—and now I work as a teacher, and my son works as a teacher, too!

Further discussion

Discuss the following questions:

- · How important is it for a couple to have the same goals in life?
- Some people find it difficult to choose a suitable partner. Why do you think this is?
- · Do you think it is important for couples to share responsibility for looking after the house and the children?
- What do you think are the greatest challenges for people who decide to settle down together?
- Some people say that men benefit from marriage more than women do. What do you think?

- Give full answers to the questions, justifying your opinions. Remember, it is your language which is being assessed and not your ideas.
- Respond to what your partner says, as in Part 3 above, and develop the discussion.

Multiple choice 1.21–1.23

You will hear three different extracts. For questions 1-6, choose the answer (A, B or C) which fits best according to what you hear. There are two questions for each extract.

What to expect in the exam

In Part 1 of the Listening paper, the three extracts are all on different themes. However, for the task you are about to do, the extracts are all on the same theme of relationships.

Extract One

You hear part of an interview with an actress called Miriam Landers talking about a director she has worked with.

- 1 How does Miriam feel about acting in her new play?
  - A She is nervous about the first night of the production.
    - B She feels certain her performance will be convincing.
  - C She is concerned that it will leave her feeling very tired.
- 2 What does Miriam say about her relationship with her director, Malcolm Rush?
  - A He makes all the important decisions.
  - B He always finds something to criticize.
  - C He is prepared to listen to her suggestions.

Extract Two

You hear two university students talking about their experience of groupwork.

- 3 What do both speakers say about working within a group?
  - A It was very productive.
  - B It resulted in conflict.
  - C It took up too much time.
- 4 What did the woman find most challenging about her project?
  - A stating her opinion
  - B meeting the deadline
  - C finding source material

Extract Three

You hear part of an interview with a professional rally driver.

- 5 What is worrying the driver about his next race?
  - A the fact that he has a new co-driver
  - B the possibility that he may lose control of the car-
  - C the risk of the car having engine failure
- 6 What does he say about the role of the co-driver?
  - A A co-driver is supposed to keep. the driver calm.
  - B Many people do not appreciate what the co-driver does.
  - C It is always the co-driver's fault when accidents occur.

Language focus 2: Relative clauses

- Read sentences a—F from the listening. Then answer questions 1–4 below.
  - a It's Scott who has the map and the notes.
  - b Are you at all anxious or is opening night an occasion which no longer bothers you?
  - You don't just learn the part you live it, which takes away any lears you might have of not being able to persuade an audience you're real.
  - d Actors I've worked with, some of whom have been rather new to the stage, know that he's going to be tough with you.
  - your new play, which opens next week, is described as a black comedy.
  - f Our discussions generated ideas I hadn't even thought of.
  - 1 What or who do each of the relative pronouns in a-e refer to?
  - Why are commas used before the relative pronoun in c, d and e but not in a or b?
  - 3 Which of the relative pronouns could be replaced by that?
  - 4 Which relative pronoun has been omitted from f? Why is it possible to leave it out of this sentence but not the others?

Check your ideas in the Grammar reference on page 219.

- 2 Complete each of the spaces with one of the words from the box. Each of the words can be used more than once. Then decide whether:
  - a commas are required or not
  - b that can be used instead of the word you have chosen
  - c the word can be omitted

Writing

Proposal

What to expect in the exam

In Part 2 of the Writing paper, you might have the opportunity to write a proposal. You may be asked to suggest ways to improve morale at work, amenities in your local town, self-study facilities for students at your college and so on. To do this task well, you need to think about your target reader: either the person/people who asked you to write the proposal, or the group assessing your proposal. You will need to write in a way that persuades your target reader that your ideas and suggestions are worth considering.

Read the following Part 2 task and the model answer. Does the answer address both aspects of the task?

Your company has problems with some employees not working well with each other and needs to improve relations between them. You have been asked by your manager to propose ways in which relations can be improved.

Your proposal should

- outline reasons for the problems.
- suggest ways to improve relations.

Write your proposal in 220-260 words.

Proposal: Improving staff relations at i-tech

Introduction

Over the last few months there has been beneficin between members of staff in the company. This has heala regative effect, on productivity.

New staff

Four employees have recently transferred to our branch from the city branch. However, some long-term employees at this branch flave complained that their new colleagues have not been doing their job properly and ill feeling has resulted from this. I have carried out some informal interviews and I suspect that they are simply not familiar with our particular systems.

I suggest that we have a craining day for all the new staff, proferably as soon as possible. I recommend this belied by Daniel Billep as no has organized training assertions before and has good rapport with the new group.

Staff with family commisments

We have a number of employees with young families. This sometimes means this sam employee needs to leave work early if their shild is sick. However, some staff members without children are unhappy with this situation.

I propose that we create a clearer policy about taking time off for family commitments. We should indicate how staff can make up any hours they have lost for instance, by working from home or extending thair hours on another day. In this way, other employees will know that the company is not discriminating against anyone.

Conclusion

I feel that the current problems we are experiencing with staff relations can be resolved, providing new staff receive the necessary training, and that all staff perceive that their workmates are fulfilling the terms of their contract,

Clear organization and appropriate paragraphing are essential features of all Advanced writing task types. For proposals, as with reports, a relevant title and paragraph headings are also useful.

2 Read the following extract from an article on Howard Gardner's theory of multiple intelligences. How would be rank the people shown in the photos?

Charles Darwin

Albert Einstein

Marie Curie

MULTIPLE INTELLIGENCES

lbert Einstein was one of the greatest thinkers the world has ever known. He formulated theories of relativity, successfully described the nature of the universe and came up with the most famous 5 equation in the world. David Beckham was a footballer whose skill and precision made him one of the most gifted sportsmen of his generation. Who is the more intelligent?

Howard Gardner's theory of multiple intelligences 10 (MI) dares us to put these two men on neighbouring pedestals. Instead of regarding intelligence as a single quantity (g) measurable by pen-and-paper tests, Gardner, an education professor at Harvard University, divides human intelligence into no fewer than eight 15 separate categories ranging from mathematical to musical competence. His ideas have provoked vigorous debate about how one defines intelligence, about how children should be educated and how society treats those who do not sit at the top of the academic heap.

20 They have certainly divided parents – Celebration, the American town created by the Disney Corporation*, based its school around Gardner's fundamental ideas. Several parents subsequently complained that their children were not being taught satisfactorily, and 25 withdrew them. Gardner's point is that g measures only one capacity, the sort of mental agility that is valued in academic achievement, and that this single number does not do justice to human potential. So he has created his own spheres of achievement.

30 Some categories are easily reconcilable with general perceptions about IQ. For example, 'linguistic' intelligence confers a mastery of language, and is the preserve of such people as poets, writers and linguists. 'Logical mathematical' intelligence marks out people

35 who take a reasoning approach to physical things, and seek underlying principles. Einstein is the standardbearer for this group, which also includes philosophers. These two categories are the main components of what we generally think of as 'intelligence'.

40 'Musical' intelligence characterizes musicians, composers and conductors. 'Spatial' intelligence is about being able to picture perspective, to visualize a world in one's head with great accuracy. Chess players, artists and architects would rate highly in this category.

45 Dancers, athletes and actors are lumped under the 'bodily-kinesthetic' heading; these individuals, like Beckham, are able to control their bodies and movements very carefully.

Then come two types of 'personal' intelligence – 50 intrapersonal, the ability to gauge one's own mood, feelings and mental states, and interpersonal, being able to gauge it in others and use the information. These two categories could be interpreted as emotional intelligence. Psychiatrists are particularly adept at the 55 former, while religious leaders and politicians are seen as people who can exploit the latter.

Charles Darwin is perhaps the perfect embodiment of the eighth intelligence – 'naturalist'. This label describes people with a deep understanding of the 60 natural world and its objects. Zoologists and botanists can count themselves among this group. Gardner has tentatively named a ninth, 'existential' intelligence, which characterizes those who ask fundamental questions about the universe. The Dalai Lama and Jean-

65 Paul Sartre would reside in this classification. This ninth addition, however, has yet to be confirmed to Gardner's satisfaction.

These eight (or nine) categories certainly reflect the fact that, in these areas, there is a spectrum of human ability 70 ranging from the hopeless to the brilliant. But are these really intelligences, or could these competences be more accurately described as gifts or talents?

Reacting to the text

- 1 How would you answer the question in the final paragraph?
- 2 In which of the nine categories do you perform the best? What encouragement or help have you received in realizing your potential in this field?
- 3 Do you think children should be educated differently in the light of this theory? Should schools focus less on traditional notions of intelligence and take more account of each individual's specific strengths?

Language focus 1: Passives 1

- Match each of the following extracts to one of the photos on page 70. Ignore any mistakes you find for the moment.
  - a She is, of course, famous for being written a series of books about a young wizard and his adventures at wizard school. The stories, which have being translated into more than 50 different languages, are read by children and adults of all ages all over the world.
  - b And now we come to a series of pictures of Rouen Cathedral. These masterpieces of impressionism have all been painted at the end of the 19th century by the man who has generally regarded as the leader of the movement.
  - c In 1894 she met Pierre, the man with whom she would change the course of science. He was introduce to her by a Polish acquaintance, who thought Pierre might be able to find room in his lab for her to carry out the study she had been commissioning to do by the Society for the Encouragement of National Industry.
  - d The Port of Salvador, Brazil, was arrived by him aboard the HMS Beagle on 28 February 1832 and so began his fiveyear study of the flora and fauna of South America. During his travels there he contracted Chagas Disease and he was being plagued by fatigue and intestinal sickness for the rest of his life.
  - e She thoroughly deserved the Best Actress award for her performance as Margaret Thatcher in The Iron Lady (2011). Perhaps less of the film should had been devoted to showing Thatcher in her old age, but it was fascinating to see the former British Prime Minister being played for this talented and versatile American.
- in each extract there are two mistakes related to the passive.Find the mistakes and correct them.
- 3 The agent, the person or thing that performs an action, is often not mentioned in passive constructions. Match the reasons a-d to the examples 1-4.

Reasons why the agent is not mentioned

- a to avoid the use of 'you' in official notices
- b the agent is unknown or unimportant
- c It is obvious who the agent is
- d the agent is 'people in general'

Examples:

- Several parents subsequently complained that their children were not being taught satisfactorily, and withdrew them.
- 2 But are these really intelligences, or could these competences be more accurately described as gifts or talents?
- 3 The stories have been translated into over 50 different languages.
- 4 All library books must be returned before the end of term.
- 4 a The use of either the active or passive is often determined by context. In English 'given', or previously mentioned information tends to come at the beginning of a clause or sentence, and new information towards the end. This is illustrated in the second sentences of each extract in exercise 1 above.

Example: a

The stories is 'given' information: they are mentioned in the previous sentence.

are read by children and adults of all ages all over the world is new information: this fact has not yet been mentioned.

Because the 'given' information, 'The stories', is not the agent of the verb 'read', then the passive form is required.

- b Circle the given information at the beginning of the second sentences in extracts b—e. Are the subsequent verbs in the active or the passive?
- 5 a There is also a tendency in English to place long phrases towards the end of a clause. Consequently, if the agent is a long phrase, then this appears at the end of the clause and the passive form of the verb is required.

Example: a

- ... by children and adults of all ages all over the world.
- b Underline the agent in each of the second sentences in b—e in exercise 1.

Read more about passives in Parts A–C of the Grammar reference on page 219.

Practice

The extracts 1–5 below and on page 73 have been taken from students' written work. For each extract, consider the whole context and rewrite the second sentence if you think it would sound more natural in the passive. If you change a sentence, decide whether the agent needs to be mentioned.

I am writing with regard to an article which recently appeared in your newspaper on the subject of this year's Charity Fun Run. Steven Ward, former Olympic<sup>3</sup> athlete and manager of the Hythe sports centre, which sponsored the event, wrote the item.

C	highly	extremely	absolutely	verv	quite	PROMISING

- 5 In the reading text we were told that David Beckham was 'one of the most gifted sportsmen of his generation'. Think of one famous person for each of the following descriptions and tell your partner about him or her.
  - a highly talented young actor
  - b an exceptionally gifted musician
  - e a very promising young (tennis, football, etc) player or athlete

Writing Part 2

Review

- 1 What do you think is the connection between the people in the photographs?
- 2 Read the following Part 2 task and the model answer. Given the information in the answer, which of the two films would you prefer to see?

An international magazine has asked its readers to send in a review for its regular arts section. Write a review for the magazine comparing and contrasting two books, films or music albums. Comment on their similarities and differences, and say which of the two books, films or music albums you would recommend and why. Write between 220 and 260 words.

Don't forget!

Aim to grab the reader's interest from the beginning. Express your opinions throughout your answer.

- 3 What information is contained in each paragraph? How many paragraphs include the writer's opinion?
- 4 Make a note of those adjectives used by the writer to express an opinion on the film or the acting. Include any accompanying adverbs or nouns.

Example: stunning performance

5 Which words and expressions are used in the model to compare and contrast the two films? Make a note of them together with any other relevant words.

Example: the two films resemble each other b The article refers to a field of study called 'neuroaesthetics'. What does the prefix 'neuro' always refer to?

What are aesthetics?

- 3 Read the first two paragraphs of the article on page 76. Choose a suitable subheading.
  - A What could explain the way we are drawn to abstract art?
  - B What is different about the minds of artists who produce abstract work?
  - C Which forms of art are likely to provoke the strongest reaction?
- 4 Read the article. For questions 1-6 on page 77, choose the answer (A, B, C or D) which you think fits best according to the text.

In the eye of the beholder

Standing in front of Jackson Pollock's Summertime: Number 9A last June, I was struck by an unfamiliar feeling. What I once considered an ugly collection of random paint splatters now spoke to me as a

- 5 joyous celebration of movement and energy. It was the first time a piece of abstract art had stirred my emotions. Like many people, I used to dismiss these works as a waste of time and energy. Since then, I have come to appreciate the work of many more
- 10 modern artists, who express varying degrees of abstraction in their work. Even so, when I tried to explain my taste, I found myself lost for words. Why are we attracted to paintings that seem to bear no relation to the physical world?
- 15 Little did I know that researchers have already started to address this question. By studying the brain's responses to different paintings, they have been examining the way the mind perceives art. Although their work cannot yet explain the
- 20 nuances of our tastes, it has highlighted some of the unique ways in which these masterpieces hijack the brain's visual system. The studies are part of an emerging discipline called neuroacstherics, which aims to bring scientific objectivity to the study
- 25 of art, in an attempt to find neurological bases for the techniques that artists have perfected over the years. It has already offered insights into many masterpieces. The blurred imagery of Impressionist paintings seems to cause activity in the brain's
- 30 amygdala, for instance, and since this plays a crucial role in our emotions, that finding might explain why many people find these pieces moving. Could the same approach tell us anything about the abstract pieces characteristic of modern art?
- 35 Although abstract artworks often sell for immense sums of money, (Pollock's No. 5 fetched $140 million in 2006) they have attracted many sceptics, who claim that modern artists lack the competence of the masters before them. Instead, they believe
- 40 that people might claim to like them simply because they are in vogue. In the scathing words of the American satirist Al Capp, they are the 'product of the untalented, sold by the unprincipled to the utterly bewildered'.
- 45 When an experiment requires people to make simple perceptual decisions such as matching up a shape with its rotated image, for instance, the - average person will often choose a definitively wrong answer if they see others doing the same.

- 50 It is easy to imagine that this phenomenon would have an even greater impact on a fuzzy concept like art appreciation, where there is no right or wrong answer, only subjective ones.
- Angelma Hawley-Dolan of Boston College,
- 55 Massachusetts, responded to this debate by designing an experiment that played with her volunteer's expectations of the pieces they were seeing. They viewed pairs of paintings either the creations of famous abstract artists or the doodles of
- 60 amateurs, infants, chimps and elephants—and then judged what they preferred. A third of the paintings were given no captions, while the rest were labelled. The twist was that sometimes labels were mixed up, so that the volunteers might think they were
- 65 viewing a chimp's messy brushstrokes when they were actually seeing an expressionist piece by Mark Rothko. Some sceptics might argue that it is impossible to tell the difference, but in each set of trials, the volunteers generally preferred the work
- 70 of the well-accepted human artists, even when they believed it was by an animal or child. Somehow, it is evident that the viewer can sense the artist's vision in these paintings, even when they can't explain why.
- 75 But why do such paintings hold our attention? Alex Forsythe, a psychologist at the University of Liverpool, has found that many abstract pieces show signs of fractal patterns – repeating motifs that re-occur at different scales. Fractals are common
- 80 throughout nature you can see them in the jagged peaks of a mountain or the unfurling fronds of the fern. It is possible that our visual system, which evolved in the natural environment, finds it easier to process these kinds of scenes. The case
- for this hypothesis is not watertight, though, since the fractal content in the paintings she analysed was considerably higher than you would normally find in natural scenes – to the point that, in other circumstances, it would be considered too busy to
- 90 be pleasant. Forsythe thinks that arrists may choose their colours to 'soothe a negative experience we would normally have when encountering too high a fractal content'. It's still early days for the field of neuroaesthetics and this kind of study is probably
- 95 only a taste of what is to come.

Don't forget!

- First, find the parts of the text which relate to each question. The questions follow the same order as the information in the text.
- Eliminate the options which are clearly wrong and choose the best answer underlining key phrases or sentences in the text.
- Reread the questions and check that the options you have chosen accurately reflect the information you have underlined in the text.
- When the writer viewed the Jackson Pollock painting in June, she was
  - A not in the right mood to appreciate it.
  - B taken aback by her own response.
  - C reluctant to admit her opinion to others.
  - D puzzled by the reaction of other people.
- 2 We are told that researchers in the field of neuroaesthetics
  - A intended to locate the areas of the brain associated with artistic ability.
  - B have shown which artistic styles are likely to enjoy popular appeal.
  - C wanted to see how brain processes influence people's response to art.
  - D have identified the kind of person who would respond to abstract art.
- 3 In the third paragraph, the writer is
  - A outlining criticisms levelled against modern art.
  - B contrasting the views of opponents and supporters of modern art.
  - C expressing a degree of cynicism towards the sums paid for artworks.
  - D implying that paintings are viewed as commodities rather than art.

- 4 In the fourth paragraph, the writer is casting doubt upon
  - A the belief that people can learn to recognize good art.
  - B the ability of people to have independent thought.
  - C the assumption that art can be fairly evaluated.
  - D the validity of a particular kind of experiment.
- 5 When referring to Hawley-Dolan's experiment, the writer puts forward the view that
  - A people instinctively recognize the work of a good artist.
  - B there were flaws in the way the research was conducted.
  - C the preference for human art was largely predictable.
  - D the art of non-human species can be unexpectedly skilful.
- 6 What does the writer suggest about Alex Forsythe?
  - A She has inspired others to take up the discipline of neuroaesthetics.
  - B She needs to take a less emotive approach to her research.
  - C The scope of her research has been impressively wide.
  - D Her theory is not entirely convincing.

Reacting to the text

Do you agree that abstract artworks are the 'product of the untalented, sold by the unprincipled to the utterly bewildered?

Do you think that artistic ability is something we are born with or can it be learnt?

Language focus 2: Passives 2

A Reporting verbs

 The following structure can be used with certain verbs to give generalized opinions or facts.

Narcolepsy is known to affect at least 2500 people in the UK.

It's widely believed to be the result of a genetic mutation. (= Many people believe it is the result of a genetic mutation.)
Sufferers are often mistakenly considered to be inebriated or lazy.

With past reference, the perfect infinitive is used.

Jenkins is said to have had financial problems. (= People say that Jenkins had financial problems.)
She was thought to have fled the country.
(= The police thought she had fled the country.)

- Rewrite a-e below. Start the beginning of each new sentence with the underlined word or words.
  - People expect that the Prime Minister will announce his resignation later today.
  - b They understand that the 22-year-old striker is considering a move to a Spanish club.
  - c There's a rumour going round that the band have sacked their lead guitarist.
  - d The police alleged that he had been selling stolen goods.
  - One report says that she was paid over £2 million for her part in the film.

B Have/Get something done

- 1 What is the difference between the following sentences?
  - a We're painting the house at the weekend.
  - b We're having the house painted at the weekend.
  - We're getting the house painted at the weekend.
- What is the difference in the use of have in the following two sentences?
  - a I had my watch repaired last week.
  - b I had my watch stolen last week.

C Other passives with get

Get can also be used as an informal alternative to be in passive sentences.

Example:

I've applied for loads of jobs but keep getting turned down.

Get meaning 'become' is also common with the following past participles, sometimes with an object.

get stuck get caught get burnt get left get lost get dressed get involved get hurt

Examples:

The postman got stuck in the lift this morning. She got her head stuck in the back of the chair.

Read more about the points in sections A, B and C in Part D of the Grammar reference on page 220.

Practice

- Complete each gap with a suitable phrase with have or get.
   The first two have been done for you.
  - a Hurry up or you'll get left behind!
  - b I go to a reflexologist every month to have my feet massaged.
  - c This is the first time | _____ cleaned since I bought it for our wedding.
  - d They've got a map and a compass so they're hardly likely .
  - e I do wish you tested I really think you need glasses, you know.

  - g He _____ writing graffiti on the bus and they fined him £50.
  - h We ought ____ serviced the engine's making all sorts of funny noises.
  - i We ______ broken into at the weekend. They took the computer, TV, DVD player – everything.
  - j I think you _____ cut before your interview.
- Tell your partner about
  - something you've had done recently.
  - something you'd pay to have done if you had the money.
  - something you'd never have done, ever.
  - an occasion when you got lost.
  - a time when you got caught doing something you shouldn't have been.

Introduction

In this unit we will look at some of the techniques and approaches you should adopt in order to complete the four Reading tasks in the Reading and Use of English paper. For information on the Use of English tasks, see pages 42–45.

Part 5: Multiple choice

- Part 5 contains one text followed by six 4 option multiple-choice questions. The task below is typical of those found in this part of the Reading paper.
- Quickly read the article about researchers looking for signs of alientale. Does the article personale you that aliens might exist? Why/Why.not?
- 3 Read the article again. For questions 1–6, choose the answer (A, B, C or D) which you think tits best according to the text. Underline the parts of the text which help you make your choices. Example: 1B

What to expect in the exam

- Each correct answer in Parts 5, 6 and 7 receives two marks.
- in Part 5 the questions follow the same order as the information in the text, although the final question may lest understanding of the text as a whole.
- The questions may test detail, but also focus heavily on your understanding of the writer's attitude, opinion, purpose, tone and implication. You may also be tested on your understanding of text organization features, such as comparison (question 3 on page 83) and exemplification, when the writer mentions an example of something in order to make a point, (question 6 on page 91 in Unit 7).
- Many of the wrong options, or distractors, express ideas which are similar to, but not the same as, those expressed in the text.
  - Each of the highlighted sections in the text expresses an idea which might cause you to choose the wrong option for the question in brackets. As you answer questions 2, 5 and 6, march the highlighted section to the distractor and say why it is the wrong answer.
  - e.g. 1 (D) In the final sentence of the first paragraph, the writer explains that scientists are still struggling to resolve Fermi's paradox. This does not mean they are involved in disputes with each other, merely that they are finding it hard to understand and explain why there is no evidence of intelligent alien life in a universe with so many planets.

First contact: will we ever hear from aliens?

- Scientists have been listening for extracerrestrial transmissions since the 1960s, but all they have picked up is static. There are a lot of stars, and, by inference, lots of planets, on which aliens could evolve. So why hasn't one had the courtesy to make
- 5 itself known to us? It is a good question, one originally posed by the Lalian physicist Enrico Fermi, one of the founders of quantum physics. If intelligent life is common in the universe, we should have been contacted long ago, he argued. After all, Earth is relatively young in astronomical terms while
- alien civilizations elsewhere in the universe have had billions of years to rise, establish themselves and make themselves known to humanity. 'So where are they?' asked Fermi.
   This is Fermi's paradox, and one which scientists, despite all their offects, still struggle to resolve.
- 15 Much of their problem lies with the basic make-up of our galaxy. The Milky Way is an unremarkable group of stars, in a not very special part of the cosmos (2) that contains a hundred billion stars, a promising enough number if seeking the odd intelligent alien, you might have thought. However, 20, most of these stars are rejust to be too big too stort-lived.
- 20 most of these stars are going to be too big, too short-lived, too hot or too cold to support planets that might sustain intelligent beings. Thus the hunt to find the hornes of clever extraterrestrials becomes less of a steady systematic search and more of a hunt for a planetary needle in a galactic haystack.
- 25 And there are other reasons why our galaxy is not alive with the sound of extraterrestrial twitter. From the perspective of US astronomers Peter D Ward and Donald Brownlee, Earth turns out to be prime galactic real estate. First, our

- sun is a highly stable star unaffected by wild fluctuations in radiation output. Furthermore, our solar system is situated. in a safe suburban part of the galaxy, undisturbed by close neighbouring stars that could dislodge comets hovering at the edges of most solar systems. For good measure, our world is further blessed in having a relatively large moon which
- helped stabilize Earth's rotation, preventing wild climactic swings. In other words, say these scientists, the primitive slime that evolved on Earth was blessed with conditions that allowed it, eventually, to evolve into the only intelligent creatures known to science, ourselves. So, while alien life may
- be commonplace on other planets, a hostile environment may mean that only single-cell forms can be supported there. Or it could be that extraterrestrial civilizations are ten a penny in our galaxy but doomed from the start. Aliens may simply be like us: just smart enough to invent technology
- but not clever enough to centrol it. Thus they may be wiping themselves out round the galaxy almost as fast as they develop technology, an argument put forward by the evolutionary expert Stephen Jay Gould. Perhaps any society that could build a technology for such interplanetary travel must first pass through a period of potential destruction where technological capacity outstrips social or moral restraint. Perhaps, no, or very few, societies can ever emerge
- (5) Such arguments are rejected by other astronomers, however. These sciencists have argued that absence of evidence is very different from evidence of allen absence. For a start, says Seth Shostak, chief astronomer for the Search

- for Extraterrestrial Intelligence (SETI), alien hunting has been hindered - until recently - by a lack of equipment and resources. Governments have consistently refused to finance SETI programmes and so its practitioners have had to borrow time on astronomical radio telescopes, usually for only a few days at a time. 'It's like trying to do medical research when you have to go next door to borrow a
- microscope for a couple of hours at most, adds Shostak. However, SETI scientists are now building their own telescopes, a classic example being the Allen Array, funded through a $11.5m donation from Paul Allen, co-founder of Microsoft®. 'When we do get a signal - we will follow its source very carefully across the sky, as the Earth rotates,'
- says Shostak. Then we will ask other observatories to check it out, and if they back us, we will simply announce the existence of a message from E.T.
- However, the biology of aliens themselves is virtually 75 unguessable. An alien could be of almost any size or shape. imaginable, though most scientists believe he or she (or it) is likely to be a carbon-based being like ourselves, from a world like ours, that is rich in water, the matrix of life. Indeed, the process of biological convergence, which produces similar
- species from organisms from very different evolutionary origins, makes it plausible that aliens will be very similar to us, not just in design but in behaviour. (6) For the latter, we don't have a great record, having wiped our countless other species. So if aliens do call, it may be best not to pick up
- The writer refers to physicist Enrico Ferrai in order to intact from such a crucial episode."

- A relate any claims that alien life forms have wisited Earth.
- B highlight the nature of the challenge facing researchers.
- C show how aften life would be too remote to ever identify.
- D exemplify the kind of disputes arising between researchers.
- 2 When talking about the Milky Way, the writer purs forward the view that
  - Λ the chances of finding alien life in our <sup>3</sup> particular galaxy are minimal.
  - B other galaxies have more potential to produce life than ours does.
  - C the sheer number of stars that exist mean that alien life must also exist.
  - D researchers should rethink their approach to exploring space for aliens
- 3 In the third paragraph the writer draws a contens.
  - A conditions which will generate new life forms. and those that will not.
  - B the views held by certain people in space research and others in the lield.
  - the way that life has developed on our planet. and how it might develop on others.
  - D beliefs that people held about the solar system in the past and in the present.

- 4 The writer uses the quote from Stephen Jay Gould
  - A highlight a flaw in a theory.
  - B illustrate a particular point.
  - C challenge majority opinion.
  - D cast doubt on a previous argument.
- 5 What are we told about astronomer Sech Shostak?
  - A He believes that proof of alien life may not have been recognized by scientists.
  - B He resents having to compete with other researchers for financial support.
  - C He is sceptical about the claims of other astronomers searching for alien existence.
  - D. He has been frustrated by government attitude. towards his area of research.
- In the final paragraph, the writer suggests that aliens
  - A may find human behaviour aggressive.
  - could be wary of making contact with humans.
  - C may share certain characteristics with humans.
  - D will be superior in some aspects to humans.
- 4 Part 5 questions may include a verb + noun collocation, as in number 2 above; puts forward the view. Turn to page 206 and do the exercise.

Part 6: Cross-text multiple matching

Part 6 consists of lour short texts by different writers on a similar theme followed by four multiple-matching questions.

The task requires you to read all four texts very carefully so that you can recognize the opinions and attitudes of each individual writer and see how these compare to the views of the other three.

2 Look at the photograph below together with the subheading for the four extracts from introductions to history books on page 85. Which group of historical people are the four authors discussing?

What do you already know about this group of people? Discuss your ideas with a partner,

Read the texts quickly. Are any of your ideas mentioned by the authors?

3 For questions 1-4, choose from the authors A-D. The authors may be chosen more than once.

How to ou alroad it

- Read the rubric, the title and the subheading carefully. This will give you a good idea about the central theme of the four texts; in other words, the one topic that the four different writers are all talking about.
- Read the four questions to identify the key information to focus on, e.g.
  - aspects of the Viking legacy common modern beliefs about Viking lifestyles
  - assessment of archaeological evidence the extent of Viking exploration
- Quickly read each of the four texts to get an idea of what each one is about.
- Read each text more carefully to locate a reference to each of the four questions.
- To help you for question 1, the references to the Viking legacy in each text have been underlined. (There is no such underlining in the exam.)
- Identify the opinion that each writer has on each question and compare it to that of the other writers. At this stage, you could look for:
  - adjectives or verbs which indicate whether the writer's attitude is positive or negative,
  - e.g. Text A in question 2: two-dimensional caricatures, dismiss them we must
  - phrases or conjunctions which indicate the writer's support or disregard for particular ideas,
  - e.g. In fact (A), Despite (B), indeed (B), It is thanks to (C).

A look back in time

Four authors introduce their history books on the theme of the Vikings

Δ

Ask people to think of a Viking and the image they would most likely conjure up is one of a huge, flame-haired Norseman in a horned helmet and brandishing a battleaxe. In fact, such ideas stem from romanticized

- 5 tales that took hold in the 18th century and which have evolved into the two-dimensional caricatures we are familiar with today. They may be captivating, but dismiss them we must. These myths have acquired such power that certain modern historians appear to
- 10 have been unable to resist turning assertion into fact, attributing purposes to relics for which there is no support, and imposing their interpretations of ritual when there is no truly reliable record. What has to be recognized above all else is the Vikings' technological
- 15 ability in boatbuilding and navigation, to which seafaring nations owe a debt of gratitude whether they realize it or not. On our own journey of discovery, we must stick with the facts, in particular when it comes to the limits of Viking territory. Reaching North
- 20 America was a triumph of sailing know-how, courage and ambition. To imagine that they went further is, at best, wishful thinking.

40 It is thanks to the perseverance of modern archaeologists at excavation sites, and the painstaking interpretation of written sources by fellow academics in the field, that our cliched images of the Vikings as mere marauders can 45 be dispelled. This is vital if we are to admire these peoples for what they truly were; master boatbuilders whose technological know-how was a turning point for ship design and construction in Europe. They were able not only to sail around the 50 coastlines of Europe and North Africa but to reach distant Asia and North America. Some researchers have claimed evidence of Viking migration further afield, but this remains contentious speculation. Part of the problem facing Viking researchers is the 55 lack of hard evidence: Vikings often cremated their warriors and heroes, along with their weapons and navigational instruments. F. rthermore, these early Scandinavian peoples were illiterate, and thus left no record of their own.

B

The Vikings were one of the world's greatest seafaring peoples, whose adventures and exploits have become segendary, and who must be singled out because of their enormous influence on boatbuilding and navigation skills, even down to the present day. Their history stretches from the late 8th century to the mid 11th, and within this time the sight of their longships evoked terror in the hearts 30 of all that fled before them. Here we will be considering the stories of these Scandinavians and what they mean to us. We will examine the growing evidence which suggests that the achievements of these mariners were greater than is currently recognized.

greater than is currently recognized, and that indeed, they sent beyond North America and Asia and reached the Australian continent long before other European explorers.
Despite the refusal of many scholars to even consider this proposition, the proof is there, as we shall see in the coming chapter.

D

- by What would it be like to sight a fleet of Viking longships making silent progress up the river towards your settlement? To catch that first glance of a horde of Viking invaders surrounding your village? Ironically, it was not the Vikings that
- 65 recorded their own fighting prowess, but the people they attacked, often Christian scholars writing in Latin and perhaps centuries later as the stories grew with each telling. In this work, I hope to present a view of the Vikings, based on unbiased investigation
- 70 of original artefacts and objective interpretation of excavation sites. I choose such adjectives because the process of Viking research has not always been conducted in these ways. Even now, the current contention that the Vikings beat the Europeans to
- 75 Australia shows how keen some Viking 'experts' are to promote their own theories regardless of the truth. While the Vikings' seafaring techniques cannot be underestimated, it is their contribution to language and artistry that has, to my mind, made
- En the greater and more enduring impression on our European culture.

Which author

has a different opinion from the others on which aspect of the Viking legacy is most significant?

shares author A's opinion on common modern beliefs about Viking lifestyles?

takes a similar view to author D on the way previous archaeological evidence has been assessed?

expresses a different view from the others on the extent of Viking exploration?

Part 7: Gapped text

Part 7 consists of a text from which six paragraphs have been removed and placed in a different order after the text. You have to decide which gap in the text each paragraph has been removed from.

This task tests your understanding of text structure and your ability to predict how a text will develop. It is important, therefore, that you first familiarize yourself fully with the base text (the main text with the gaps) in order to gain an overall idea of the content of the text, and also its structure.

- 2 Cook at the subheading for the newspaper article. How would pupils benefit from being brave, resilient and kind?
- 3 Read through the base text (ignoring the questions in italics). Are any of your ideas from exercise 2 mentioned?
- 4 Read the base text again. For each gap in the base text, read the paragraphs on either side of it, together with the questions in italics, to help you predict the general content of the missing paragraph.

How to go about it

- Read all the paragraphs before you stort to make any choices.
- As you decide on your answers, underline ideas, words or phrases in the base text which show links with the missing paragraphs.
- Check your answers by reading through the whole article again to ensure that it makes sense. Check that the extra paragraph does not fit into any of the gaps.
- 5 For questions 1-6, choose which of the paragraphs A-G fit into the numbered gaps in the article. There is one extra paragraph which does not fit any of the gaps.
- A Rother, children seemed distracted, or else worryingly devoted to getting things 'right'. And when I started to ask teachers about this, I released a tsunami of anxiety about the everyday behaviour they were seeing in school.
- B Reaction to both these publications was diverse, and it wasn't just parents who responded. And while they had much in common, there was one aspect of his research that seemed dubious to me.
- C But when I got over myself and settled down to read his work, I realized we were approaching the same important territory from different angles. His is a brilliantly readable account of the growing evidence that inner resources count more than any amount of extra teaching when it comes to overcoming educational disadvantage.
- Meanwhile, universities were raising the alarm about how today's 'satnay' students seemed less able to think for themselves. A toxic combination of teaching to the test at school and parents hovering over their lives, was starting to mean that even those headed for the most prestigious universities were helpless when they first had to fend for themselves.

- This is the message of a new education book that has been topping the best-seller charts in the US. It has caused great debate by pointing out that over-assiduous parenting is associated with rising rates of anxiety and failure.
- F My book, by contrast, is being written specifically for parents to show what strength of character consists of. It identifies six key values that, when knitted together, give a person deep rooted focus, integrity and resilience, and suggests an outline for encouraging children to grow the 'backbone' of these qualities.
- G But, as this book shows, character is badly in need of a comeback, and some pioneering schools are already starting to put it at the heart of their curriculum. It's a timely message, yet last summer, when the book was first published, it had me grinding my teeth in fury.

Better people make better students

Hilary Wilce explains the importance of teaching pupils to be brave, resilient and kind.

Character matters. In fact, it matters more than anything else when it comes to doing well in school – and life. Yet parents and schools are actively preventing children from developing their inner resources, either by being too 5 neglectful, or by never allowing them to fail.

What might 'It' refer to in the phrase 'It looks at why...' in the sentence below?

But its main concern is with poor children. It looks at why so many educational interventions fail to help disadvantaged students do better, and demonstrates that it is things like perseverance and determination that ultimately help children succeed. This ald-fashioned message would have been common once but appears to have vanished from the modern world.

Look at the first sentence below. In the missing paragraph above, will the writer be expressing a positive or a negative reaction?

This was not because I disagreed with its thesis but because I was deep into researching what seemed at first glance to be the same subject. US social affairs reporter Paul Tough had produced How Children Succeed: Grit, Curiosity and the Hidden Power of Character. The working title of my book was Backbone: What Children Need, Aren't Getting and How to Give it Back to Them.

In the paragraph above, the writer uses the plirase 'at first glunce'. What does this phrase usually indicate? How do writers or texts usually continue after using this phrase?

Drawing on neuroscience, economics, psychology and child development. Tough shows how qualities such as self-mastery and aptimism are what make children succeed, and how, in the light of this, good parenting and character-based schooling can make all the difference.
It's a persuasive argument, and for anyone involved in creating educational policy, it should be forced reading, so they can see how fiddling with school structures can never, by itself, help pupils do better.

† In the paragraph below, is the writer talling about Backbone (her from bank) or How Children Succeed (Paul Tough's book)? How do you know?

On the way, it looks at the research showing how children an are becoming more self-absorbed and less able to deal with selbacks, and outlines how this in turn is making them less equipped to work with others and bounce back from disappointments. All this sprang out of the growing unease I felt as I spert time in schools. As a journalist, 35 I was usually there to write about 'development' in advantion – a revamped curriculum, or inventive method of teaching – yet it seemed to me that pupils' attitudes were too often suboraging the very things designed to help them. And not, alcs, in any exhilaratingly 43 rebellious way.

† Who might 'one' and 'another' be referring to in the paragraph below? How do you know?

One said each new intake seemed loss willing to share or even hang their own coats on their own pags. Another complained about the staggering sense of entitlement many pupils now demonstrated – if he gave them poor marks for a piece of work, they felt it was never because they could have done better, but only because he was 'picking on' them. (And often, he said, their parents agreed.)

\tag{What do you understand by the phrases 'tomorrow's adults' and 'personal resources' in the paragraph below? (These are likely to be alluded to its some way in the massing paragraph above.)

All this matters desperately because in a competitive world, tomorrow's adults will have to draw deeply on their personal resources to navigate life's constant changes. A good life domands courage, resilience, honesty and kindness. This is the true spine of success, without which we are all jellyfish. And since no one wants their child to be a jellyfish, our prime job as parents – and teachers – has to be to help our children build the backbone they need.

Ready for Reading

Part 8: Multiple matching

- 1 Part 8 consists of a longer text or several short texts preceded by questions or statements which you have to match with the corresponding information in the text.
  The task requires you to scan the text in order to find the specific information you need.
  It is not necessary to read every word in the text to complete the task.
- 2 Read through the text on page 89 to get a general idea of its content.
  What is the writer's attitude to biography at the beginning of the text? And by the end?
- 3 For questions 1-10, choose from the text sections (A-F). The sections may be chosen more than once.

What to expect in the exam

Each correct answer in Part 8 receives one mark.

How to go about it

- Underline key words in the statements before the text. One of these has been done for you.
- Scan each of the texts, looking for information which matches that contained in the statements.

  The first statement for text A has been given and the relevant section in the text has been underlined.

  For the other statements, underline and label the relevant section, as in the example for number 2.
- If there are any statements you have not matched, scan the texts again looking for the information you need.

In which section are the following mentioned?

a biographer's use of items that had great sentimental value to the person written about the writer's confession that she was reluctant to reveal the nature of her job 2 the view that we can only make sense of individuals by looking at their wider group the possible reaction of readers today towards biographies they consider oversize the advantage of omitting unnecessary detail from a biography 5 the view that the traditional structure of a biography does not accurately reflect reality 6 the ability of a biographer to incorporate the lives of many people into one work 7 the stimulus a biographer's subject required before finding his true vocation 18 a specific event being used as the focal point in a biography that deals with wider issues examples of characteristics that often define poorly written biographies 100

The art of biography

What is the future for this literary genre?

A

In 2008, I wrote a piece in which I declared that biography, if not quite dead, was in a terrible state. For years publishers had been timidly churning out versions of the last mega-hit, Amanda Foreman's

- 5 excellent Georgiana, which had appeared a whole decade earlier. The endless counterfeit Georgianas, however, showed all the tendencies that the critic Janet Malcolm has identified as the mark of so much biographical writing: a sense that, as long as
- 10 the facts are there, it doesn't matter how badly or baldly they are set out. The biographies Malcolm had in her sights were written in leaden prose, and entailed a marathon trudge from cradle to grave. I hesitated before telling people I was a biographer:
- 15 It felt tantamount to admitting that I was a journalist incapable of original thought. (2)

But it turns out that biography wasn't in terminal decline after all. Last weekend the University of East Anglia hosted a conference entitled Turning Points

- 20 at which masters and mistresses of the biographical genre took its pulse and made the cheering diagnosis that it is, in fact, in good health. What has happened, these expert practitioners explained, is that biography has changed its shape. This shift
- 25 has emerged from a growing sense that biography as it used to be done was not getting us close to the experience it was trying to describe. We all know that life isn't actually comprised of a stately march through the decades in which loose ends,
- false trails, and those periods where nothing much happens are tidled away out of sight. Mostly our lives feel shapeless, coming into focus only when a particular occasion makes us feel, for a few minutes at least, fully ourselves.

- 35 One new approach to biography employs the presenting of something small – a deserted hamlet, two rusty muskets in a field – to tell a bigger story about the plague or the Battle of Culloden. Frances Wilson demonstrated how effective this
- 40 approach can be in her recent How to Survive the Titanic. She focuses on the moment when J Bruce Ismay, the ship's owner, took the fatal decision to jump into a lifeboat while the rest of the first-class men gallantly allowed women and children to
- 45 take the available spaces. Pressing hard on Ismay's split-second decision to leap to safety, Wilson tells a story not just about one man's lost honour, but about a layered drama of class, nationality and technological modernity. Another new way of doing biography is to organize your narrative around the objects that carried a particular emotional charge for your subject. In her book, The Real Jane Austen, for instance, Paula Byrne pulls out an East Indian shawl, a barouche and a bathing machine that figured in both Austen's own life and her fiction, and weaves a new narrative around them.

The new 'collective' approach to biography, meanwhile, acknowledges that people are always connected to others, even to those they can't stand or don't know personally, through familial and professional networks. It's an approach taken by Amanda Foreman in her follow-up to Georgiana. This time she opted to write A World on Fire, an

- epic history of two nations divided which tells the story of Anglo-American relations during the American Civil War by using mini-biographical case histories. Marshalling a vast cast of characters like this demonstrates an extraordinary degree of
- 70 technical skill: like a juggler, she keeps many plates spinning while making it all look effortless.

The third type of new biography concerns 'the life in parts'; your subject's non-eventful schooling or the long holidays by the sea can be compressed

- 75 into a few terse paragraphs so you can spend more time on the bits that matter. It was an approach showcased brilliantly by Matthew Hollis. In Now All Roads Lead to France Hollis concentrates on the defining moment when the Anglo-Welsh writer
- 80 Edward Thomas gave up his unfulfilling journalistic career in favour of the poetry he had never quite got round to making. Under the pressure of the looming war, Thomas finally became the kind of writer he was meant to be, producing in the last
- 85 five years of his life poetry that would change the music of the English language forever.

F

It would be disingenuous to claim that these new ways of telling lives are entirely driven by intellectual concerns. The pressures are commercial,

- 50 too. People also have shorter attention spans which means that those doorstop biographies of 400 pages can start to seem like a looming threat rather than a delicious promise. But more and more interesting books are being published which deal
- 95 with the lives of others. They may not announce themselves as 'biographies', but that doesn't mean they aren't. The genre is alive and well.
- 4 In Part 8, nouns or noun phrases may appear in questions 1-10, such as the writer's confession that or the view that in the reading task above. Adjectives might also be used to indicate opinion or attitude. Turn to page 206 and do the exercise.

Multiple choice

What is your reaction to the images shown in the pictures? How do you think these images might be associated with the theme of 'Feeling good'?

does he refer to the ideas shown in the images?
3 Read the text again. For questions 1-6, choose the answer (A, B, C or D) which you think fits best according to the text.

Chasing the highs

Why do people enjoy doing things which are potentially bad for them?

- That which does not kill us makes us stronger,' wrote Friedrich Nietzsche, the German philosopher, conceptualizing the idea that suffering is an inevitable and essential part of life. Is this still true when we bring the
- 5 misfortune upon ourselves, and end up with metal pins in our joints? A few weeks ago I heard of an old school friend (to be known here as Dave) who ended up with fractures in both ankles and his left wrist after falling to keep his grip while free climbing. My reaction, initially, was to
- 10 grimace, but then I got round to wondering why a man of his age would be risking life and limb on a sheer rock face. I can't help feeling he was showing off, under the delusion that at 40 he was at his physical peak. His mother refused to pay a hospital visit, reportedly disgusted at his
- 15 egoistic risk-taking, although surely this is the person she brought him up to be.
  - 50 what is the allure of extreme sports and living life on the edge? According to recent research, we can blame it all on dopamine, the chemical which helps control the brain's
- 20 reward and pleasure centres. It's responsible for providing a sense of contentment after a meal or that ecstatic feeling when our soccer team wins. It's also responsible for the high we feel when we do something brave, like swimming with sharks. Studies show that in the risk-taker's brain.
- 25 there are fewer dopamine-inhibiting receptors. In other words, the Daves of this world have brains more saturated with the chemical, meaning they'll keep taking risks and chasing the next high. The researchers are now working on a treatment, yet I don't envisage much uptake from the
- 30 daredevils 'suffering' this condition.

- People don't just do this sort of thing in their free time, though. Last night, I happened across a battered Brad Pitt-kookalike flying across my TV screen, explosions still
- 35 a cut-above-the-rest documentary about the lives of stuntmen and women that stand in for the stars. Ironically, as a behind-the-scenes look at a career in Hollywood, nothing felt staged; rare for modern television. But it was the quicter moments of candid reflection that stood out, firing off in the background. This was 'Body Double',

- 40 with some of the doubles expressing their anxiety to the presenter over the longevity of their exceet. This is hardly surprising, given the amount of physical punishment that is continuously self-inflicted; neck injuries, burns, torn ligaments; the list goes on. The last word went to Jake,
- 45 who'd quit his promising career as an actor, and had been lured into stunt work because, as he put it, there'd be no dull moments. The famed camaraderic that exists amongst those in the profession was also a big drawcard, and perhaps it's this that keeps him signing contracts, despite
- 50 his wife's protestations.
  - While hurrling at 100mph towards the ground or leaping across roofiops will never be my thing. I confess to a love of horror movies. I take curious and enormous pleasure from being half-seared to death, to the point where I'm
- 55 near paralysed. Looking at the growth of the horrorflick industry, I'm not alone. But why do we do it? One explanation is that when you're on the edge of your cinema seat, you can benefit from what seems a life-ordeath situation, with the advantage of realizing, a mere

- 60 moment later and with joyful relief, that it's not. From the evolutionary perspective, it's been suggested that we've developed to find terrifying moments mesmerizing so as to ensure that we study would be threats to survival. There's little research to back this up, though.
- Taking pleasure from activities which are potentially harmful or terrifying to ourselves is one thing; deriving it from the misfortune of others is quite another. The Germans refer to this phenomenon as Schadenfreude, a concept that other languages may not have an equivalent.
- 70 single word for, but which seems to be nonetheless
- understood by the inhabitants of today's 'global village'.

  What with the exponential rise of internet video clips, it is now possible to view the humiliation of thousands of strangers on demand. If you want to see someone diving unwithingly into a frozen lake; it's online. How about a man being attacked by an angry deer? Click on 'Flay'. As a form of entertainment, it says little for human evolution. But as life becomes more comfortable, and in a society where most of our basic needs are met, one has to wonder what new thrills we'll seek out next, and what we're prepared to sacrifice for that ephemeral feel-good factor.
- 1 After the writer had reflected on the news about his old school friend Dave,
  - A he felt some disapproval towards his behaviour.
  - B he was envious of his active lifestyle.
  - C he felt the accident was undeserved.
  - D he was sympathetic to Dave's mother's point of view.
- 2 When discussing dopamine and extreme sports, the writer puts forward the view that
  - A the findings of the dopamine research are hardly surprising.
  - B a lack of dopamine cannot fully account for the desire to live dangerously.
  - C risk-takers are unlikely to want their dopamine levels reduced.
  - D dopamine has a greater effect on the human body than some people think.
- 3 According to the writer, what was the most impressive aspect of the documentary?
  - A the use of previously unseen film footage
  - B the director's innovative style
  - C the interspersing of drama and fact
  - D the interviews with the subjects
- 4 Why did Jake become a stuntman?
  - A He liked the idea of working within a group of friendly people.
  - B He had been encouraged to have a go by others in the field.
  - C He had had unrealistic expectations about the nature of the job.
  - D He had been unsuccessful in an earlier line of work.
- 5 In the fourth paragraph, the writer is
  - A encouraging readers to experience horror movies for themselves.
  - B questioning the claims of people studying horror movies.
  - C downplaying the effect of horror movies on audiences.
  - D suggesting explanations for why people find horror movies enjoyable.
- 6 The writer mentions internet video clips to illustrate his suggestion that
  - A there is an element of risk in everything we do.
  - B the kind of risks people take may well become more extreme.
  - C the majority of people are not amused by other people's suffering.
  - D it makes more sense to laugh at other people's embarrassment than our own.

Reacting to the text

Why do you think people take part in extreme sports or other potentially dangerous activities? Is it the kind of activity that you would enjoy?

Do you agree with the writer when referring to extreme internet video clips that 'As a form of entertainment, it says little for human evolution'?

Vocabulary: Risk and health

A Taking risks

- 1 Underline the correct word to complete the expressions in bold. Check your answers in the reading text on pages 90 and 91.
  - 1 The company brought struggleimisfortune upon themselves through their own bad decisions.
  - 2 You'll be risking life and limb/soul if you go up there without any safety equipment.
  - 3 He was a musician that lived life on the edge/brink, so no wonder he died young.
  - 4 I feel scared to piecesideath every time I'm a passenger in Jack's car.
  - 5 It's because she hates her job that she's always seeking out new pastimes/thrills at the weekend.

B Complaints and injuries

2 a For each of the adjectives on the left, underline the noun or nouns on the right which collocate with it. You may need to underline one, two or all three nouns. There is an example at the beginning (0).

muscles/ligaments/cheeks 0 torn tooth/stomach/bone 1 chipped sprained nail/ankle/wrist 3 blocked toe/nose/neck 4 dislocated shoulder/hip/jaw

5 bruised ribs/thigh/tooth 6 swollen glands/lips/feet heart/stomach/brain

Which of the complaints and injuries in a have you suffered? Tell your partner about them.

Essay

Look at the following chart showing statistics for obesity. Which countries have the highest and lowest rates of obesity? Why do you think these countries suffer/don't suffer from this crisis?

Read the following Part 1 task and a student's answer (ignoring the gaps). Has the student responded to all parts of the task?

Your class has recently attended a lecture on what methods governments should use to tackle obesity in schoolchildren. You have made the notes below:

Write an essay for your tutor discussing two of the methods in your notes. You should explain which method you think is more important for governments to consider, giving reasons in support of your answer.

You may, if you wish, make use of the opinions expressed in the discussion, but you should use your own words as far as possible.

Obesity: how do we tackle it?

Obesity has become a major issue for many developed countries. (1) _______does it affect the quality of life of millions of people, but it has serious consequences for a country's economy and health services. It is evident, (2) ______, that this is a problem that demands urgent action. There are many practical steps that governments could take to tackle it, but the following two would probably be the most effective.

Firstly, governments need to impose stricter laws (3) ______ the sale and marketing of fast food to young children. Fast food chains should (4) ______ be allowed to operate near schools nor advertise at times when children are likely to be watching television. Food companies, cafés and restaurants should also be required to show the calorie content of meals on labels or menus. (5) ______, parents would be better able to make an informed choice about their children's diet.

Secondly, it is a sad fact that many children are not getting the kind of exercise that older generations benefited from. Many urban families live in environments which provide no opportunity for outdoor activity. For (6) _______, governments need to make sure that schools have the kind of facilities that allow children to exercise and keep fit. They should also be ensuring that school timetables include regular sessions of physical education.

In the 21st century, it is ironic that for many children, it is overeuting that is responsible for bad health, not starvation. If governments continue to ignore this crisis, the long-term consequences may be worse than we can imagine.

3 When you write your essay, it is important to use linking words and phrases to connect your ideas. Put the words/phrases in the box into gaps 1-6 in the model answer.

5 Read the Essay task below and write your answer in 220–260 words in an appropriate style.

Your class has recently watched a documentary on what methods governments should use to tackle cyberbullying amongst schoolchildren. You have made the notes below:

Methods governments should use to tackle cyberbullying amongst schoolchildren

- · school campaigns
- · social media regulation
- punishment

Some opinions expressed in the documentary:

'If parents don't monitor their kid's online activity, there's not much schools can do.'

'Social media sites should do more to stop cyberbullies.'

'The government should introduce tougher penalties for this kind of bullying.'

Write an essay for your tutor discussing two of the methods in your notes. You should explain which method you think is more important for governments to consider, giving reasons in support of your answer.

You may, if you wish, make use of the opinions expressed in the documentary, but you should use your own words as far as possible.

Cross-text multiple matching

Which of the following 'self-help' themes would you be most and least interested in reading

- ways to improve your self-esteem
- strategies for making people like you more
- a set of 'rules' for finding and holding on to the perfect boyfriend/girlfriend
- tips for surviving in life-threatening situations
- methods for enhancing your business negotiation skills
- techniques for memorizing information

You are going to read four reviews of a book about self-help. For questions 1-4, choose from the reviews A-D. The reviews may be chosen more than once.

Improving your self-esteem

Four reviewers comment on Oliver McPherson's self-help book called Journeys and Horizons

The latest publication in the self-help genre is journeys and Horizons, a guide to improving self-esteem and achieving personal goals. In this, we are presented with a series of case studies, based on the interviews writer Oliver

- 5 McPherson has carried out with his subjects. While there is a story that will reflect most people's experience, there are occasions when extreme claims are left unsubstantiated, as are unlikely statistics for areas such as 'the vital link between self-worth and longevity! Then one wonders how
- 10 much McPherson has relied on the work of others in the field in order to lend his book more substance. He can also be harsh when it comes to the reasons why people end up 'demotivated and driffing', placing the blame solely on an inadequate upbringing and absolving the individual from
- 15 any personal responsibility, although the rationale for this line of thought is hard to pin down. Nonetheless, this is an accessible read, offering practical steps for confidencebuilding along the way.

- Bach chapter of lourneys and Hortzons begins with an extract from 20 an interview with a traveller'; which is how writer Oliver McPherson refers to the people whose lives, decisions and accurate/erroneous evaluation of self form the basis of this self-help work. According to McPherson, the choices they have made, or neglected to make, place them somewhere along the spectrum of 'highly effective' to
- 25 'extremely dysfunctional, with the latter condition apparently the fault of poor parenting skills. (Why this should be the case - when the opposite is not - is a point that McPherson does not back up with hard evidence.) Chapters conclude with an analysis of the behaviours that reinforce each person's positive self-image, or impair it, and a set
- 30 of sensible key strategics for 'appreciating your own worth' that can readily be put into practice. Unlike certain previous authors in the field, McPherson offers some genuinely refreshing insights into what creates a balanced 'whole' person, taking the reader with him on a journey of honest self-reflection.

- 35 In Journeys and Horizons, Oliver McPherson draws on earlier research into the area of self-esteem and how it influences our responses to opportunities that present themselves in life: do we seize or dismiss them? While not a particularly pioneering work, it is still mostly an engaging
- 40 one. The case studies of people on the road to personal success or the path to personal defeat' are well-constructed and the interviews are poignant. Less convincing are some of the strategies McPherson puts forward for dealing with self-confidence issues within the family hierarchy. Is it
- 45 really worth challenging older siblings or confronting ageing parents with a list of their believiours you find detrimental to your well-being? McPherson has also rather limited his readership by focusing on the middle class and employed, a misjudgement, to my mind. Surely in times 50 of recession its the underprivileged and long-term out-of-
- work that need a boost?

With the wealth of new titles jostling for position on the self-help shelf, it can be a challenge to pick out something really worth your attention. Oliver McPherson's Journeys

- 55 and Horizons may well be that candidate. An evaluation of the requirements for positive self-image and personal achievement, the book offers little that is new in terms of theory and concept, but readers will appreciate McPherson's unique blend of frank assessment and consistent optimism
- 60 Life skills will be enhanced by following his simple recommendations; strategies we already suspect may be effective but have never quite managed to put in place. For my part, if the case studies presented had reflected a wider section of society, McPherson's work might indeed meril
- 65 a public service award. All the same, an intelligent and inspiring read.

Which reviewer

expresses the same opinion as reviewer C regarding the scope of McPherson's book?	1 has a different view from the others on the originality of McPherson's ideas?	2 shares reviewer A's opinion about the support McPherson offers for his beliefs?	3 expresses a different view from the others concerning the extent to which McPherson's ideas are workable?	4

Reacting to the text

Do you agree with the idea that 'an inadequate upbringing' is solely responsible for the way that a person's character develops?

Are there any other factors that might play a greater role in a person's character development?

Language focus: Reported speech

A Direct and reported speech

1 In the following example, an extract of direct speech from the listening has been reported. What tense changes have been made after the reporting verbs in bold?

Presenter: 'Have other people noticed the effects?'
Lynnie: 'Yes, they have. And they've grown used to my new look now.'

The presenter asked Lynnie if other people had noticed the effects and she replied that they had, and added that they'd grown used to her new look.

What other changes do you notice?

Read more about these changes in Part A of the Grammar reference on page 220.

2 For questions 1–4 below, refer to the direct speech to help you complete the gaps in the reported version. Use the reporting verbs in the box. Do not write more than two words in each gap. The exercise begins with an example (0).

warned	announced	reminded	repeated pointed out	predicted	conceded
admitted	stressed	concluded

- O 'Yes, I do accept the situation is critical, but let me say once again that we are doing our best to find a solution.' The Prime Minister conceded that the situation was critical, but repeated that the government was doing its best to find a solution.
- 1 'Yes, I did sell the stolen paintings, but I would like to mention that I have given all the proceeds to charity.'

  The defendant _______ that she ______ the stolen paintings, but ______ to the court that she ______ all the proceeds to charity.
- 2 'I think there'll be more than 250 000 taking part in the protest. There might be some violent activists —so be careful!'

The police chief ______ that there _____ over 250000 taking part in the protest. He his men that there ______ some violent activists and urged them to be careful.

3 'The result of all this is that we must increase profits. Remember – if we don't, the company will go bankrupt.' The Managing Director _______ that they increase profits and ______ the board that if they ______, the company bankrupt.

4 'I'd just like to tell everyone that I intend to resign at the end of this season. I should emphasize that I have not been asked to leave.'

The manager has	that he	to resign at the end of this s	eason. He	that he been aske	ed to leave.

B Alternative verb patterns

 Many reporting verbs can be followed by alternative verb patterns to the 'that' clause seen in section A.

Example:

'I should have started younger,' said Dr Evans. Dr Evans regretted that he had not started younger. Dr Evans regretted not starting/having started younger.

- 2 Match the groups of verbs A–D with the corresponding verb patterns 1–4.
  - 1 doing something
  - 2 to do something
  - 3 someone to do something
  - 4 (that) someone (should) do something

3 Add each verb in the box to the appropriate group A, B, C or D. Some verbs belong to more than one group, as with suggest in groups C and D.

threate	n recomm	recommend per		rsuade
ask	encourage	dem	and	offer

C Verbs and dependent prepositions

Complete each gap with an appropriate preposition. Use the same preposition for both gaps in each sentence.

Example

- Management were able to discourage workers from going on strike, but the union would not be dissuaded from taking legal action.
- I apologized _____ arriving late, but she thanked me turning up at all.
- He congratulated me _____ passing my driving test and insisted _____ buying me a drink.
- 3 She accused him _____ deception and spoke _____ reporting him to the police.
- 4 The union protested _____ the decision to sack him, but his own colleagues supported the move and argued ____ reinstating him.
- 5 She consented _____ the interview but objected _____ being photographed.

Read more about the points in sections B and C above in Part B of the Grammar reference on page 220.

Word formation: Verbs

The following verbs from the listening are formed using the affixes -ize, -ify and en-.

social + -ize they enjoy socializing

1 In 1-5 below, the affix at the beginning of each line can be used to form verbs with all of the words in the line, except one. Underline the odd one out and write down the verb forms of all the words. The exercise begins with an example (0).

0	-ize	special specialize	summary summarize	valid validate	modern modernize	commercial commercialize
1	-ify	class	example	simple	identity	general

  - Gaming helps develop a young person's creativity and their use of logic.

Language focus 1: Determiners and pronouns

1 Complete each of the gaps in the following extracts from the listening with one of the words in the box. You will need to use one of the words twice.

another	both	every	many	one
In (1)	res	spect, the	older gan	es and mod	iem

2 Determiners, which come before nouns, are often used to talk about quantities and amounts.

Example:

I don't think we've got enough evidence to show that gaming can improve your reaction time.

Many words which are determiners can also be used on their own as pronouns. Pronouns are used instead of nouns.

Example:

We need more evidence to show that gaming can improve your reaction time. We haven't got enough.

Look at the extracts in exercise 1 and decide whether each of the words you have written is used as a determiner or a pronoun.

- 3 a Determiners can be used before either singular nouns, plural nouns, uncountable nouns or nouns of more than one type. In 1–3 cross out the grammatically incorrect word. There is an example at the beginning (0).
  - 0 'All/Much/Some/No mobile phones have this facility.'
  - 1 'No/Each/All/Neither player is allowed to handle the ball in this game.'
  - 2 'This happens on many/very few/every/most days of the year in my country.'
  - 3 'A lot of/Very little/Several/No fruit is this colour.'
  - b For each correct alternative in the sentences in a, discuss what the speaker might be referring to.

Example:

'All mobile phones have this facility.' All mobile phones can be used to speak to people and send text messages.

- 4 a Sometimes more than one determiner can be used before a noun. In 1–3 cross out the incorrect alternative.
  - 1 I go swimming every many/every few weeks.
  - I'll be on holiday in another one month/another few months.
  - 3 There are no otherino many languages I'd like to learn.
  - b How true are the sentences in a for you?

Read more about determiners and pronouns in the Grammar reference on pages 220 and 221.

Practice

1 Each of the paragraphs 1–4 contains two mistakes in the use of pronouns and determiners. Find the mistakes and correct them. You will need to change the pronoun or determiner, or one of the words which follows.

Example: any them. Each one were either too long or too short and none of them would have been suitable for work.

- 1 Every other years I meet up with a few of my old school friends. All of us are married with children now and we have very little free time, but we do our best to keep in touch with each another.
- 2 This is one of the few pubs where you can still have a quiet drink. There are quite a few others lenjoy going to, but most of they play loud music and neither is very welcoming.
- 3 Alan's been working at Crabtree's for some 30 years, and there's all likelihood he'll be there for another 20. Most people in his profession change company every five years or so, but he has none intention of moving on.
- 4 Both of my daughters use the computer, but they're each restricted to an hour a day on it. Several of my friends' children, on another hand, spend as most as 20 hours a week playing games or surfing the Net.
- Complete each gap with one word from the box to complete the common expressions in bold.

Choose four of the expressions in exercise 2. Have a three-minute conversation with your partner on one of the topics on page 204, aiming to include all four expressions. At the end of the three minutes, tell your partner which expressions he or she has used.

Vocabulary 1: Amount

The underlined words in the following sentences from the listening refer to cost or amount.

In large part, I feel this is down to the media.

... they don't know about the great number of career opportunities ...

And this is an industry that now turns over huge profits annually ...

In 1–6 below, use the information in the first sentence to complete the gaps in the second, more formal sentence. You should write two words in each gap; one from box A and the other, a noun, from box B. The exercise begins with an example (0).

A	small	extra	full	great	high	large	no

   It's a bit cheaper if you pay cash.
   We offer a ______ if you pay cash.
   We've put up the price because it's very expensive to send it by rail now.
   The current ______ of rail transport has resulted in a price increase.
   A lot of customers have complained.
   We have received a ______ of complaints from customers.
- 2 O For 1-6 above, discuss with your partner the possible context for each of the sentences you have completed.

Example:

O This could be an announcement by a company or a shop which charges extra for delivery of products or purchases.

Open cloze

Gapped text

You are going to read an article that was written in 1999. In the article, the author talks about his experience of computers, email and the Internet.

How do you think that computers, email and the Internet have changed since 1999?

Think about size, speed, cost, functions, etc.

Quickly read the base text only. How does the writer feel about the technology available to him in 1999?

Now do the following Part 7 task:

You are going to read an article about someone who does not have a computer. Six paragraphs have been removed from the extract. Choose from the paragraphs A-G the one which fits each gap (1-6). There is one extra paragraph which you do not need to use.

UNPLUGGED

Martin Newell explains why he shuns computers and remains a devotee of 'snail mail'.

I am an Internot. That is, I have no desire to be on the Internet. I am, of course, well aware of the Internet. Boy, am I aware of the Internet! The world is being overtaken by people setting 5 up websites, talking www-slash-dot.coms and worrying about updating and upgrading.

In fact, if I wanted to, I could sit in front of the computer, ordering whatever I wanted, whenever I wanted, 24 hours a day, and pay for it all 10 electronically. But I don't have a computer. My friends, who look upon me as a 'technological oddity', find it hard to believe that I can still find work. I can't drive a car, won't fly and won't travel abroad anymore. I don't even have a mobile 15 phone.

As a congenital sender and receiver of snail mail, I can only remember about two occasions in 20-odd years when a letter has gone astray. Exactly how many bits of info has your machinery 20 swallowed this month, brave internaut? There is the access to information, though. While doing some research on a fairly esoteric subject earlier this year, I was told by a friend that 37 internet pages existed upon the matter. He downloaded 25 them for me.

As for the actual equipment itself, computers are so unattractive and bulky. Buying a laptop I can understand, because you can put it away. But all that dreadful grey-white office junk in your 30 living space?

4

l'almost upgraded to a computer once but decided that a piano would be more fun, so I spent the money having one fork-lifted up into my first-floor living room. While others are as getting neck-ache and headaches and running up their phone bills, I've almost figured out how to play the first few bars of Return to Sender.

It strikes me, though, that the main reason the Internet exists is not as a medium for spreading the joys of music, but more for the purpose of shopping and advertising. Now I know a little bit about shopping, because I get on my bicycle and go to the greengrocer's every once in a while.

45 But perhaps by doing things in this quaint, old-fashioned way, I'm missing out on

- some of the financial benefits of the whole computer culture. Companies are constantly undercutting each other. Full-page newspaper
- 50 ads are currently offering me the whole kit and caboodle and telling me that I can get myself connected and surfing, all for under a thousand pounds. WowI What a bargain. I could get an electric organ fork-lifted up here for that.
- ss Seriously, though, there is, I suppose, an outside chance I will be forced onto the Internet one day. By that time, however, it will have devolved into one tiny little module about the size of an answering machine, cost about 50 quid, and be instant, as well as idiot-proof for people like me.
- A There's also this marvellous little alternative to buying books on the Net: it's called my local bookshop. It has human beings working in it. Whenever I want a particular book, I just walk down there or telephone them, and they find it for me. Within a day or two I always have it.
- B Friends like these will spend hours, days even, in front of their ugly state-of-the-art computers. As they listen to music being broadcast online from all four corners of the globe, they are subjected to a constant bombardment of advertisements encouraging them to buy, buy, buy. Well, bye-bye, friends.
- C It has not escaped my attention that you can buy and sell houses on the Internet. You can book holidays, buy a pool-table and, so I hear, even get a divorce on the Internet.

  Were my dog to fall seriously ill, I could even consult a vet on the Internet. Or maybe he's called the Intervet.
- D The information was largely superficial and in one or two cases, written by someone who I suspect was not entirely of this planet.

- In the end I went to the local reference library, where a reassuringly stern librarian plonked a huge pile of books on the table in front of me and said: 'That should be a start.' I had everything I needed within an hour.
- E While we're on the subject, I hear that we can now download our music from the Net. I have only recently completed the costly operation of replacing my vinyl record collection with CDs. I hope this does not mean that these, too, will soon be obsolete.
- F My own word processor, with VDU, keyboard and printer all in one unit, is much more compact. It can be quickly shoved in the cupboard when I'm not using it. In fact, even this is too ugly for me so I glued a piece of tapestry on the space between the keyboard and the screen to make it look more homely.
- G 'But how will we get hold of you?' people ask, in a tone I usually associate with anguished parents pleading with a runaway daughter calling from a phone box. Well, you can telephone me. Or fax me. Or you could try writing me a letter.

Since you first started using the Internet, what advances do you think have been made? Is there anything about using the Internet that you find frustrating?

How do you think computers or similar communication devices will develop in the future?

Vocabulary 2: Verbs formed with up, down, over and under

Up, down, over and under can be used to form a number of verbs.

Examples:

The world is being overrtaken by people ... worrying about updating and upgrading. We can now download our music from the Net.

Companies are constantly undercutting each other.

Complete each of the gaps with the correct form of one of the verbs in the box.

uproot	uphold	ave	erthrow	overrule	overhear
downplay	downs	ize	undergo	undert	ake

Example:

We closed the door to prevent anyone Sverhearing our conversation.

- The military government was ______ by a popular uprising and democratic elections were held.
- 3 The Court of Appeal had been expected to ______ the judge's decision, instead of which it was and Jenkins had to serve out his sentence.
- 4 The two leaders ______ to find a peaceful solution to the crisis and arranged to meet again.
- 5 The 28-year-old actress is rumoured to have ______ emergency surgery, although doctors are the seriousness of the problem, suggesting she will be out of hospital soon.
- 6 During the war, thousands of children were forced to leave family, home and school.

Language focus 2: Modal verbs 2: will, shall and would

1 The following examples from the reading text on pages 106 and 107 show three different uses of will/won't.

Habit

Friends like these will spend hours, days even, in front of their ugly state-of-the-art computers.

Refusal

I ... won't fly and won't travel abroad anymore.

Prediction

There is, I suppose, an outside chance I will be forced onto the Internet one day.

2 The sentences in 1–6 all contain the modal verbs will, shall or would. Match each pair to the idea they both express.

Assumption Habit Annoying behaviour Request for advice/instructions Offer Willingness Refusal

Example:

- O I'll set it up for you if you like. It's the same as the one if use at work.
  Shall I show you how to draw graphs on it? Offer
- It won't start I think the battery's flat.
   I asked him to park it somewhere else, but he wouldn't move it:
- 2 I wish he would turn it down.
  We can watch the match on the balcony if you'll just help me take it out there.
- 3 It would keep her amused on long car journeys but we insisted she have the sound off.
  He'll play with it all morning, his eyes glued to the tiny screen.
- 4 That'|| be Mike. Don't answer it! They'|| have got there by now. Give it to me – I know their number.
- 5 He will keep forgetting to turn it off. It gets so hot in the kitchen! It would go wrong now, wouldn't it! Just as I put the meat in to roast
- 6 There's no more room in it. Where shall I put the chicken? Shall I defrost it now or when we come back?

3 What do you think it might refer to in each pair of sentences in 1-6 on page 108?

Example:

0 computer

Read more about the modal verbs will, shall and would in the Grammar reference on page 221.

- 4 a Think of three domestic appliances, machines or other electronic devices and write two sentences for each, without mentioning the name of the object. Each sentence should include one of the above uses of either will, shall or would.
  - b Show your sentences to your partner, who will - say which three objects you have written about.
    - tell you the idea expressed by the modal verbs.

Speaking

Long turn O

Here are some pictures showing people who are learning in different ways.

Student A:

Compare two of the pictures, and say why the people might have chosen to learn in these ways, and what the advantages are of learning like this.

- Why might the people have chosen to learn in these ways?
- What are the advantages of learning like this?

Student B:

In which situation does the learner have most control over their education? Now change roles. Follow the instructions again using the pictures on page 207.

Report

How useful do you think computers and the Internet are for language learning?

Some language schools or universities have multimedia rooms or learning centres where students can do extra study. In your opinion, what would the ideal multimedia room/learning centre offer in terms of technology and services? Add to the table below.

Technology c.g. really fast broadband	Services e.g. appointments with teachers for individual learning advice

- What do you think these student comments might refer to?
  - 1 'It's stuffy and crowded.'
  - 2 'Most of them are in American English.'
  - 3 'I think some of it is out-of-date.'
  - 4 'You can never get on them because people are just writing to their friends.'
  - 5 "The recordings are poor quality."
- 6 'It would be good to have a wider range.'
- 7 'The memory is too small for so many programs.'
- 8 'I can't hear myself think!'
- 9 "There's no one available when something goes wrong."
- 3 Read the following Part 2 task and discuss
  - who your target reader is.
  - what the tone of your report should be (e.g. critical, persuasive, complimentary).
  - what the general content would be for each paragraph of your report.
  - what headings you would choose.

You help out in the multimedia centre at a language school called Highford Academy. The school's director has asked you to write a report on the centre with a view to making improvements.

Your report should

- refer to the opinions of students.
- make suggestions for improvements.
- say in which areas spending could be reduced.
- 4 Reports are often based on information you have collected. In this case, you might collect your information from students and/or teachers.

Cross out the word or phrase which is least appropriate.

The (1) aim/point/purpose of this report is to (2) mention/propose/recommend ways in which facilities and services at the multimedia centre can be (3) enhanced/improved/increased, and also to (4) outline/describe/suggest where savings can be made. The recommendations are based on the opinions of students that (5) carried out an investigation/completed a questionnaire/responded to a survey.

Now write your report in 220-260 words, using some of the ideas from your discussion in exercises 1 and 2. For more information on writing reports, see pages 34 and 35 in Unit 3 and page 201 in Ready for Writing.

Climbing Margherita

The Rwenzori Mountains have long cast a spell on visitors, and recently John McKinnell became one of its victims. Here is his tale of conquering Mount Stanley's highest peak.

Ptolemy's 2nd-century maps were the first to label them as the Mountains of the Moon, yet they are not remotely arid or colourless. However, as the mountains on the Rwenzori

5 range convey such a sense of total inaccessibility. strangeness and wonder due to hosting large tracts of snow and ice in equatorial Africa, it's understandable how the moniker has lasted almost two millennia. And so there we were,

10 our intrepid group of seven setting out to attempt the eight-day trek that would take us to Margherita Peak on Mt Stanley, accompanied by 18 support people. Although conditions were idyllic, I soon had a sense of foreboding – it

15 stemmed from an exhausted party of Russian climbers we ran into on that first day. They had failed to attain the summit of Margherita, despite attempting it in perfect conditions. Would we be as lucky with the weather, I

20 wondered, and would we be skilled and strong enough to reach that sign at 5109m saying, 'Welcome to the highest point in Uganda'?

Unfortunately, one of those questions was soon answered: tropical heat gave way to heavy rain.

25 Still, on the first day, I found the paths excellent considering that Mother Nature is determined to convert them into streams and rivers - they are a testament to huge effort and proficiency on the part of their builders. On day two, we

30 reached the fringes of the alpine zone. On day three, we were squelching through swamps as the trail took us up to 4000m. It is at this point that altitude sickness often kicks in. The escape option involves completing a lower altitude

35 circuit that skirts the main peak and reaches camp five a day ahead of schedule. This was not something we contemplated.

By day five, we were ready to tackle the Stanley Glacier. Crampons were strapped to boots, and 40 the ice axes came into their own as we set off in two groups of four climbers, each linked by a 60m rope. Our guides, Jeremiah and Sebastian, were supremely confident in finding the best route, but less wonderful in their technical

45 guidance. Perhaps halfway across the ice we unexpectedly encountered a 20m rock step in the white-out conditions. Ahead of me a desperate cry rang out as Rebecca plunged nearly vertically. The guide below her wasn't 50 In position to stop her fall, but fortunately Andrew and I managed to hold her on the rope. Crunching across the glacier was otherwise enormously enjoyable. Things steepened up as we approached the final rocky prominence, and 55 the summit of volcanic rock turned out to be a lung-bursting climb. But as I stood puffing and panting at the summit cairn the swirling mist parted sufficiently for a brief glimpse of nearby

Alexandra Peak, which lifted my spirits further.

60 For all of the team, standing on top of that summit was close to a religious experience. For David and Rebecca and their dad Stephen Viljoen, this was an amazing bonding experience, an achievement sweetened by its 65 sharing. Furthermore, Rebecca (17), as the only girl on the team and under the constant scrutiny of 24 males, had proved a point. Andrew Kenny, at 60-plus, had constant, nagging doubts about this adventure, yet won through with his 70 dogged perseverance. I choked back tears as I stepped up to the very top, which represented vindication for two very gruelling and unsuccessful attempts to climb Batian, (Mount Kenya's summit) in similar poor weather.

75 On the way down, as we explored exquisite waterfalls, rushing rivers and silvery mists, I knew our hike was nearing its end. While comforts like hot showers and fresher food beckoned, I was already regretting the imminent 80 parting from our guides and porters, with whom we had forged friendships. An endearing evening ritual at every hut along the trail was a pep talk from the guides - they'd praise our efforts and exhort us to maintain our excellent job of working together. In reality, in terms of cohesion, we must have been a guide's worst nightmare as we tended to string ourselves out ahead, behind, and in between our guides and porters. Back home, my wife met me at the 90 airport and asked about the trek. 'It was wet,' I said. 'Wet, long, difficult and cold. But it was the achievement of a lifetime."

developers researchers conservation groups residents contractors stakeholders activists policy-makers

Example:

A stakeholder is a person, group or organization that has an interest in, or will be affected by, the process or outcome of a project. So if a new resort is being built in a mountain village, the stakeholders will be the people who already live there, the people who are investing in the new resort, people who might later be employed in the resort and so on.

6 Read the Part 1 task on page 119. Before you write your essay, read the section on Planning below it.

Your class has viewed a documentary on ways that sustainable tourism might be achieved. You have made the notes below:

Ways that sustainable tourism might be achieved

- providing employment
- protecting local culture
- · preserving the environment

Some opinions expressed in the documentary:

'Local people must benefit financially from tourism.'

'All too often tourists have no idea how their behaviour affects local people."

'Natural resources like the local water supply often suffer when resorts are created."

Write an essay for your tutor discussing two of the ways in your notes. You should explain which way is most likely to benefit both the host country and the tourists. giving reasons in support of your answer.

You may, if you wish, make use of the opinions expressed in the documentary, but you should use your own words as far as possible.

Write your answer in 220-260 words in an appropriate style.

Planning

1 Choose two of the ways that sustainable tourism might be achieved. Then look at the 'opinions expressed in the documentary'. Do they provide you with any further information or ideas? Now write down two or three specific examples for each way.

e.p. providing employment:

- 1 Property developers should be legally obliged to hire builders from the region; this would benefit not only the individual builders but also the families that depend on them.
- Resorts could support the local economy by selling locally-sourced crafts, rather than imported products.
- 2 Plan an introduction: think about an opening statement that will grab the reader's attention, then a sentence with your definition of sustainable tourism, with a final sentence that indicates the purpose of the essay.
- 3 Remember to choose one way that you think is likely to benefit both the host country and tourists; you can describe it in either the second or third paragraph, but you must use language that clearly shows that this is the way you believe is the most mutually beneficial.
- 4 Decide which of the language from exercises 3 and 5 on page 118 you could use in your essay.

Now write your essay.

This is an academic piece of writing, and the target reader is a tutor; the register should be formal and your tone should be objective, not emotional, even if you feel strongly about some of the issues you mention.

    - D would be difficult to control.
- 3 Do you have any suggestions for keeping calm in the car?
  Does the public transport system in your area provide a viable alternative to the car?
  How might the problem of traffic congestion in cities be solved?

Vocabulary 2: Anger

1	The following expressions were used in the listening to talk about people getting angry.
	Which two are more informal?

lose one's temper blow a fuse get worked up become irate

2 Complete each of the gaps with an adjective from the box. The words in bold are common collocates of the adjectives.

seething heated berserk irate I They had a rather _____ argument about hunting, each with very different views on the topic. 2 The waitress was attempting to calm an extremely _____ customer who was complaining loudly about his bill. 3 Mummy's a little bit _____ with you, Peter. You know you shouldn't tell lies. 4 Her face showed no emotion, but inwardly she was absolutely ____ with anger and indignation. 5 He went completely ______, shaking his fist at me and screaming blue murder.

3 Complete each of the gaps with a noun from the box.

4 What sort of things make you angry? What do you do when you lose your temper? What do you do to calm down?

Speaking

Long turn

Look at these pictures. They show people who are angry for various reasons.

Student A:

Compare two of the pictures, and say what might have happened to make these people angry and what might happen next.

What to expect in the exam

- One student speaks for a minute about two pictures from a set of three. The other student has about 30 seconds to answer an additional question on the same set of pictures.
- Both students are then given a second set of pictures and the roles are reversed.

Student B:

When your partner has finished talking about the pictures, say which of those situations is the more unpleasant for the person on the receiving end of the anger.

Now change roles. Follow the instructions again using the remaining pictures.

Before you do the task, complete the exercises in the Useful language box at the top of page 123.

- What might have happened to make these people angry?
- · What do you think might happen next?

Useful language

- 1 For each picture, decide which of the words and expressions from the Vocabulary section on page 121 you could use when talking about it.
- Complete each of the gaps with one of the pairs of words in the box. There is an example at the beginning (0).

looks as looks like may well seems quite very likely fair chance might have

- She seems guite cross.
- been put in the wrong room.
- 2 She have done something dangerous.
- if he's about to burst into tears. 3 He
- 4 There's a they'll come to blows.
- 5 They're_ to go their own separate ways.
- an example of road rage.

Word formation: Alternatives from the same prompt word

In these two extracts from the listening on page 120, the underlined adverbs are both formed from the same root, consider.

On country roads there is considerably less traffic. It also praises them when they are driving considerately.

- 1 Which other noun, apart from the one underlined, can be formed from the word in capitals?
  - COMPOSE ... suggestions as to how we can maintain our composure in the car.
- 2 Underline the appropriate alternative in the following sentences. Each alternative is formed from the same prompt word given in capitals at the end of the sentence. Pay attention to the words in bold: these words are collocates of the correct alternative.

Example:

First prize is the not inconsiderate/inconsiderable sum of £500000. CONSIDER 1 The Lord of the Rings is a timeless/an untimely classic, as fresh TIME today as it was when it was first published. ADOPT

- 2 I grew up in England, but Spain has become my adopted/adoptive country.
- 3 Appearances can be very deceitful/deceptive.
- 4 He produced a wealth of supporting/supportive evidence to substantiate his claim.
- There has been an appreciative/appreciable increase in global temperatures over the last two decades.

Introduction

The Listening paper lasts approximately 40 minutes and contains four parts with a total of 30 questions. In all four parts the recordings are heard twice. At the end of the Listening paper, you will have five minutes to transfer your answers onto the separate answer sheet. Each correct answer is awarded one mark.

Part 1: Multiple choice

- In Part 1 you will hear three short extracts from conversations between two or more people. The recordings, which are all on different themes, may be taken, for example, from radio broadcasts, conversations that you overhear, discussions or interviews. There are two multiple-choice questions for each extract. You will hear the same extract twice before moving on to the next one.
- 2 (2.4-2.6 You will hear three different extracts. For questions 1-6, choose the answer (A, B or C) which fits best according to what you hear. There are two questions for each extract.

Extract One

You overhear two journalism students talking about the issue of global warming.

- 1 Why does the man compare articles on war with articles on global warming?
  - A to show that journalism is not truly objective
  - B to emphasize that global warming has dangerous consequences
  - C to suggest that public protest is growing
- 2 The woman says that people will do less harm to the environment when
  - A they are obliged by legislation to be more considerate.
  - B they see how they can personally benefit from this.
  - C they are given information which is more accurate.

Extract Two

You hear part of an interview with Andy Marsden, the owner of a chocolate manufacturing company and shop.

- 3 What made Andy decide to buy Kiss Chocolates?
  - A He had once been employed there.
  - B His wife and the owner were old friends.
  - C He thought it would provide a safe future.
- 4 What does Andy like most about working at Kiss Chocolates?
  - A testing the chocolates
  - B dealing with customers
  - C making a steady profit

Extract Three

You hear two people on a book review programme talking about a book called The Children of Hurin.

- 5 The two speakers agree that The Children of Hurin.
  - A is hard to put down.
  - B has a sad feel to it.
  - C ends in a surprising way.
- 6 What slight criticism does the man make about the book?
  - A It contains different styles of writing.
  - B The characters are not complex enough.
  - C The themes may not appeal to modern readers.
- 3 Check your answers by looking at the listening script on pages 233 and 234. Underline the part or parts of each extract which indicate the correct answer. The first one has been done for you.

Part 2: Sentence completion

1 In Part 2 you will hear a monologue lasting approximately three minutes. The recording will be taken from one of a possible number of sources including presentations, talks, lectures and anecdotes.

There are eight questions testing your understanding of specific information and people's opinions. You are usually required to complete sentences with a single noun or a noun phrase, e.g. social media, diploma course. You will not be tested on phrases that require hyphens (-).

2 2.7 You will hear part of a talk by Amanda Tyler, who is a waxwork sculptor. For questions 1-8, complete the sentences with a word or short phrase.

What to expect in the exam

- For Part 2 tasks you have 45 seconds to read the questions. Use this time to think about the kind of information you might hear and the language structure you might need to complete each question.
   e.g. I A noun will be needed here, possibly preceded by an adjective. It will probably be a part of the building, but the preposition 'in' can't be followed by 'first floor', 'second floor', etc.
- For some of the questions you will hear distractors, words which might at first seem relevant, but which do not complete the questions correctly. For question 2, for example, you will hear Amanda mention two courses she took. Only one of these, however, is a degree course; the other is a distractor.

As you read each question, underline key words to help you focus on the exact information required. The first two have been done for you.

WAXWORK SCULPTOR

> 3 On page 205 you will find one student's answers to the listening task above together with relevant advice about what to do and what not to do.

> > Did you make any similar mistakes?

Part 3: Multiple choice

1 Part 3 consists of a conversation between two or more speakers lasting approximately four minutes. There are six multiple-choice questions, mostly testing your understanding of the attitudes and opinions of the speakers. The questions follow the same order as the corresponding information in the recording.

What to expect in the exam

- For Part 3 tasks you have one minute to read through the questions.
- As with the other Parts of the Listening paper, you will hear words and ideas which may cause you to choose the wrong answer.
- You will hear an interview with Sandra Poyton and David Sadler, who work as partners in the media company, Advert Eyes, making TV commercials. For questions 1–6, choose the answer (A, B, C or D) which fits best according to what you hear.
- 3 Before you answer questions 1-6, here is an example (0). Read the question and the shaded section of the recording on page 234. Decide on the correct answer, underlining the part or parts of the text which justify your choice.
  - 0 Why did Sandra leave her job with the satellite TV company?
    - A She was unhappy with the salary.
    - B She felt she was too old for the job.
    - C She predicted she might lose her job.
    - D She did not get on with her colleagues.
- 4 With your partner, explain with reference to the text why the other options are wrong.
- 5 2.8 Now read questions 1-6. Then listen to the recording and choose the correct answers.
  - 1 What did David learn from his time with Trenton TV?
    - A the need to work as part of a team
    - B the importance of having a positive outlook
    - C the advantages of working under pressure
    - b the need to question existing practices
  - 2 What impressed Sandra about David when they first met?
    - A his experience
    - B his appearance
    - C his future plans
    - D his corbusiasm
  - 3 What made David accept Sandra's proposal to go into partnership?
    - A He had always enjoyed taking risks.
    - B He felt they had a similar way of thinking.
    - C She had relevant directing experience.
    - D She was familiar with the business world.

- 4 How did Sandra feel when she was having problems raising money for the business?
  - A puzzled
  - B depressed
  - C angry
  - D worried
- 5 What does David consider to be a drawback of directing TV commercials?
  - A He does not achieve enough recognition for his work.
  - B He does not have enough control over content.
  - C Money has too great an influence on the process.
  - D Many clients have unrealistic expectations.
- 6 What do Sandra and David say about the future of their company?
  - A They would prefer to keep their plans a secret.
  - B Their aim is to expand at some time in the future.
  - C They are unsure how the company will develop.
  - D They hope to move into other areas of directing.
- 6 Look at the listening script on pages 234 and 235 and for questions 1–6 follow the same procedure as in exercises 3 and 4 above.

Part 4: Multiple matching

- 1 In Part 4 you will hear five short monologues which are all related in some way. For each speaker there are two separate tasks. For each task, you are required to select the correct option from a choice of eight.
- 2 2.9-2.13 You will hear five short extracts in which people are talking about living abroad.

Concentrate mainly, but not exclusively, on Task One the first time you listen. The second time you listen, give more attention to Task Two.

3 Check your answers using the listening script on page 235. Underline those parts of each extract which guide you to the correct answers.

What to expect in the exam

- You have 45 seconds to read through the tasks.
- Listen to the whole of each monologue to find the answers to both tasks. You may hear the answer to Task Two before the answer to Task One. This is the case with Speaker 4 below.
- Once again, you will hear distractors.

TASK ONE		TASKTWO

- For questions 1-15, read the text again and think of the word which best fits each gap. Use only one word in each gap, There is an example at the beginning (0). Write your answers IN CAPITAL LETTERS. Use the questions and advice in the box to help you.
  - 1 Why is a relative pronoun not possible here?
  - 2/3 See page 221 for the grammar of 'likely' and 'bound'.
  - 4 Will the missing word have a positive or negative meaning?
  - 5 Overall context and 'just' before the gap will help you make your choice.
  - 6 Which preposition is required after responsibility?
  - 7 Look at the surrounding context. Can women 'pride themselves on having a spotless home' now?
  - 8 This phrasal verb appeared on page 98.
  - 9 A preposition is required to complete this phrasal verb.
  - 10 Why is an adjective not possible here before the singular countable noun way'?
  - 11 See page 103 for the expression 'an awful '
  - 12 Note the infinitive later in the sentence.
  - 13 Note that 'seem' is the infinitive form of the verb, not the third person singular. What does this tell you about the type of word required in the gap?
  - 14 See page 220 for the grammar of 'suggest'.
  - 15 Which preposition is used in the expression 'keep something _____ control'?

What to expect in the exam

In the Advanced exam there are only eight gaps in the Open cloze.

4 Who does 'the lion's share of domestic chores' in your house? Why? To what extent are you/your parents houseproud?

Do you follow the advice in the last sentence of the text? What other advice would you give to make housework less depressing?

Multiple choice

- In what ways would your life be different if your house had no running water, no electricity and no central heating? How would you cope?
- 2 Read through the text quickly and answer the following questions: What is your initial reaction to the story of Albert Juttus? Do you feel sympathy for him? Why/Why not?
- 3 Now read the text again. For questions 1-6, choose the answer (A, B, C or D) which you think fits best according to the text.

THE JOY OF PLUMBING

An elderly couple is brought into the 21st century.

I'm driving along a road in Leicestershire, in the tidy heart of the English countryside, where slick green fields roll out on either side to the horizon. I drive through the village of Shenton, a quiet place without so much as a pub, past.

5 prosperous-looking farms and neat brick houses. And then I pull up outside a rather shabby bungalow. Around the bungalow is a sea of mud. Between the road and the bungalow there is a ditch, choked with weeds, with a little muddy stream tricking along it. I push open the door of the bungalow to find Albert Juttus, a gentle-looking 73 year old, sitting in his front room before a tiny heater running off a cylinder of Calor gas. He's lived in this house for 46 years, and in all that time his only source of water has been that muddy ditch.

Albert had lived his life in total obscurity until last week, when the local council awarded him its biggest-ever grant, over £40,000, to transform his tiny property. It will now be connected to running water, given a new roof, windows and doors, as well as a lavatory, a sink and a shower. His wife, Grace, has moved temporarily into a marsing home while the work is in progress. Since the announcement of that grant, the council has been rather shown up by the interest that Albert Juttus's belated journey into the 21st century has attracted front-page coverage in the local paper and visits to his humble dwelling by television journalists. The council said they'd have acted sooner, had they known about the Juttuses, but the couple had obviously been slipping through the net for a long time.

But Albert Juttus's life isn't just an odd curiosity: at says something about communities and how they work, or don't work, in Britain today. Having become rather frail and 30 vulnerable in the last few years, he and his wife were heavily reliant on the good nature of one neighbour, who declines to be named. Her tales of their neglected life strike a chill into your heart. 'Every time I came back from seeing them my son would say, "You've been down at Albert's". The strink was so bad in their house it would get in my clothes. The couple, who have no family, did not realize they were entitled to an improvement grant. 'We have never had very much, but we have always had each other,' said Albert, 'and that's all we ever wanted. We've never been comfortable with the idea of handouts,'

And it would be wrong to see Albert Juttus as just someone to be pitied. In many ways he's a real survivor. Pleeing from Estonia in 1946, he came to Britain without knowing a word of English. After a succession of low-paid jobs on farms and in mills, he found work in a nearby tyre factory. He had friends there, but although he knew he was the only one without running water and electricity, his only thought was of the bills they must have had to pay each month. I didn't think I could deal with those big bills, he remembers. And didn't they tell you to get your life together? Juttus looks a little shocked. They wouldn't speak out of turn, he says quietly. So this man, living on a labourer's wage, with a wife who didn't work, clearly believed he was just looked out of the lifestyle that everyone around him took for granted.

So how did change ever come to this little bouse lost in 55 time? Albert Juttus, in his bizarrely modest but oddly practical way, decided that it was indeed pretty hard getting water out of the ditch, but that it would be easier if he had a prover well. So some time ago he asked a health worker whether they could get someone to dig a well and their case was referred to a charity called Care and Repair. Shocked beyond behief by what they saw when they visited the house, these people began to put pressure on the council to rectify the situation.

Doran't Mr Jottos wish he'd managed to change it all much earlier? It's too late to wish now, he says, stubbing out a cigarette. Times never return. And clearly something in him even feels ambivulent about the new life that looms ahead. It's easy, ixn't it, you just switch a button or turn a tap, it all just happens. But, I'll get spoilt. They'll be bringing me slippers and a pipe next.'

76 It would have been a lot easier for the council if he had agreed to move into a spanking new home on a smart estate, but he wouldn't do that. At the back of his house the view sweeps on and on over green fields and to the soft surge of low hills fringed with trees 'That's the good thing about the 75 country,' he says, looking out over the familiar prospect. 'You see long distances. I can sit out before sunset, when the birds start singing. I wouldn't like to move. What for?'

- 1 On arriving at the Juttus's bungalow, the writer was struck by
  - A its isolation from the rest of the community.
  - B the ease with which she entered it.
  - C the contrast it made with the surrounding area.
  - D the beauty of the countryside in which it was situated.
- 2 What does the writer suggest about the Juttus's case in the second paragraph?
  - A It has brought the couple a great deal of unwanted publicity.
  - B The media have helped to bring about the changes.
  - C The money paid out to the couple is excessive.
  - D It has reflected badly on the local authorities.
- 3 In the third paragraph, the writer puts forward the view that there
  - A has been a general decline in respect for elderly people.
  - B is a reluctance amongst older people to accept new circumstances.
  - C is a lack of unity among people living in the same area.
  - D may be generational differences in attitude towards self-sufficiency.
- 4 What does Albert imply about his workmates in the tyre factory?
  - A They were probably earning more than he was.
  - B They did not appreciate how lucky they were.
  - C They had more right to running water and electricity than he did.
  - D They were not the type of people to interfere in the affairs of others.
- 5 What does Albert feel about the changes to his house?
  - A He regrets not making them before.
  - B He is uncertain whether he will like them.
  - C He thinks the council could do more.
  - D He cannot believe how fortunate he is.
- 6 In the last paragraph we learn that Albert does not want to leave his house because
  - A a suitable new home has not yet been offered to him.
  - B he is mistrustful of the local authorities.
  - C the view reminds him of where he used to live.
  - D he is very attached to his surroundings.

Reacting to the text

How common is it for people in your country to live in conditions like those of the Juttuses? What can local anthorities do to help such people?

He came to Britain without knowing a word of English.' What difficulties would someone in this situation face? Would you be able to cope?

- a to another part of your town or city?
- b to a different part of your country?
- c abroad?

Language focus: Participle clauses

1 Participle clauses are clauses which begin with a present or past participle. They help to express ideas concisely and are more commonly used in written English.

Participle clauses can be used instead of relative clauses, as in this example from the reading text:

Between the road and the bungalow there is a ditch, (which is) choked with weeds ...

Which words have been omitted from the following sentence to create a participle clause?

So this man, living on a labourer's wage, clearly believed he was just locked out of the lifestyle.

- 2 Conjunctions like and, so, because, as, when, after and if can also be omitted to create participle clauses. Underline the sentences in the reading text which express the same ideas as a-d below.
  - Because they had become rather frail and vulnerable in the last few years, he and his wife were heavily reliant on the good nature of one neighbour.
  - b He fled from Estonia in 1946 and came to Britain.
  - c These people were shocked beyond belief by what they saw when they visited the house, so they began to put pressure on the local council.
  - d 'That's the good thing about the country,' he says, as he looks out over the familiar prospect.
- 3 Explain the difference in meaning between the following pairs of sentences. Which sentence in each pair is more likely?
  - 1 a Driving home from the pub last night, the police stopped him.
    - Driving home from the pub last night, he was stopped by the police.
  - 2 a The manager being ill, Elisa took over all his responsibilities for the week.
    - b Being ill, Elisa took over all the manager's responsibilities for the week.

Read more about participle clauses in the Grammar reference on page 222.

Practice

- 1 Sentences 1—6 contain participle clauses. Rewrite each one using conjunctions or relative pronouns. There is an example at the beginning (0).
  - O Not wanting to wake anyone up, she took her shoes off and tiptoed up the stairs.
    She dign't want to wake anyone up, so she took her shoes off and tiptoed up the stairs.
  - 1 Having won the silver medal in the 100 metres, he went on to take gold in the 200 metres and long jump.
  - Don't look now, but the woman sitting next to you is wearing shoes made of crocodile skin.
  - 3 Drunk in moderation, red wine is thought to protect against coronary disease.
  - 4 Wrapped in a blanket and looking tired after his ordeal, Mr Brown was full of praise for the rescue services.
  - 5 Reaching for the sugar, he knocked over his glass, spilling orange juice over her new dress.
  - 6 Having never been abroad before, Brian was feeling a little on edge.
- Rewrite the following sentences using participle clauses.
  - Because I live within walking distance of the centre, I rarely use the car.
  - 2 When I was cycling in to work the other day, I saw a deer.
  - 3 As we'd never had so much peace and quiet before, we found living here a little strange at first.
  - 4 Our bedroom, which is situated at the back of the building, has some superb views over the rooftops towards the docks.
  - 5 If you play it at full volume, it really annoys the neighbours.
  - 6 The house is a little off the beaten track, so it's not that easy to find.
  - 7 After the children had all left home, we decided to move away from the hustle and bustle.
  - 8 Although it is not known for its tourist attractions, our neighbourhood does have one or two treasures which are waiting to be discovered.
- For each of the sentences in exercise 2, say whether you think the speaker lives in a rural area or a city. Which would you prefer to live in? Give reasons.

Multiple matching 2.14-2.18

You will hear five short extracts in which people are talking about noise from the neighbouring house.

TASK ONE		TASKTWO
For questions 1–5, choose from the list (A–H) what the cause of the noise was.		For questions 6-10, choose from the list (A-H) what the speakers say about the effect the noise had on them
Wh	ile you listen you m	ust complete both tasks.
A birds	7	A It changed my personality.	6

Informal email

Imagine a friend is coming to stay in your home for a few weeks while you are away. Which of the following things would you expect them to do?

- · water the houseplants
- feed and walk the dog
- · wipe down the shower
- · replace any food they eat
- put out any bottles or tins for recycling

- only use the washing machine at set times
- · limit the amount of hot water used
- · clean up after themselves
- ensure the windows and doors are locked on leaving the house

Is there anything else you would expect your friend to do?

Would it depend on the season in any way?

Hi Steve

It's good to know that you'll be in the apartment while I'm away in Berlin. It's in a pretty safe area, but it's reassuring to have you keeping an eye on things.

First, you need to know how to get into the building. When you arrive, press the buzzer for number 15 – that's my neighbour, Eric Grueber. He knows you're coming and he'll let you in and hand over the keys to my apartment door. The next time you need to get into the building, just enter the security number, which I'll stick on the fridge. I'm on the third floor so I don't really care about windows being open.

There's a load of stuff in the fridge and food cupboard so help yourself. But if you run out, head down to the supermarket on the corner. Tuesday is bottle and tin collection day, so would you mind putting them in the green recycling box, and then making sure the box is outside on the pavement before 8am? My neighbours are fairly easygoing, but please keep things sweet by not playing loud music or using the washing machine after 9pm. Thanks!

As for getting around, all the good cafés and shops are just five minutes' walk away and the city centre is traffic-free, so I'd just use your legs! If you feel like going further, Lake Constance is a brilliant place to visit: there are good rail connections, and you can borrow my bike, too. I'll leave some tourist information leaflets and train timetable in the kitchen.

Get in touch if you need any more info.

Johannes

Dear Steve

000

Thank you for your small. I hope the following information will be of use to you.

Security matters

- On arrival: press the buzzer for number 15. You will be let into the building by my neighbour Eric Grueber, and then given the keys to my apartment door.
- Security number for the building: this will be on the fridge door.
- General security: windows can be left open at all times as the apartment is on the third floor.

Household responsibilities

- Food supplies: should you need to go shopping, the supermarket on the corner is reasonable.
- Recycling: bottles and tins must be placed in the green recycling box and placed outside on the kerb by 8am Tuesday at the latest.
- Noise control: please refrain from playing music or using the washing machine after 9pm.

Transport

- City centre cafés and shops: these can be accessed best on foot since the centre is free from traffic.
- Longer distances: the train is highly recommended and there is also a bicycle available for your personal use.

Johannes

- 3 In sample answer A, the writer does more than just provide the basic information that was requested. Find examples of
  - how he makes his friend feel welcome.
  - what he adds to make his friend feel positive about his upcoming stay.
- 4 Now write your answer to the task below.

You receive this message from an English friend who has agreed to help manage your shop for a day while you are away.

Hi – I'm looking forward to helping manage the shop next Saturday. But is there anything I need to know about the staff? What about opening and locking up? Is there any other information I should know? Send me an email, please.

Write your email in 220-260 words.

What do you think would be the pros and cons of living in these neighbourhoods?

What attracts residents to your neighbourhood? What facilities do you think are lacking?

How would you rate your local infrastructure, particularly with regard to roads and public transport?

Are there any improvements that could be made?

You are going to read four blogs in which the writers are talking about council proposals for the local area. For questions 1-4, choose from the blogs A-D. The blogs may be chosen more than once.

Proposals for the Bayview area

Four writers comment on council proposals for the local area

	Our council members, a hopeless group who demonstrated remarkable incompetence in the design process of Hillside
5	Road, are now busily working on plans for the rest of Bayview, again behind closed doors. Only when these people finish will the public be 'invited' to submit comments, by which point
25	none of these will make a difference. The council will simply go ahead despite our concerns. Where is the transparency in this process? When has anyone from the council ever taken responsibility for the vast sums of money wasted when their in my view, the problems we are faced with – the escalation of high-rise housing in single-storey areas, the road design, 15	the connection to our city, these issues have to be addressed before our beautiful environment is damaged beyond repair.
	The council has announced its intention to spend a figure approaching 520 million over the next few years improving facilities and transport in Bayview. This is not before time.
20	Furthermore, they have apparently set aside further funds to improve traffic flow on Hillside Road, and to finance the design and building of an exhibition centre and renovation of the library. People who live and work here will have to face the inconvenience of noise, dust and blocked-off pavements as 25	roads are widened and car parks are extended in downtown Bayview, but this is something we must tolerate if we aim to attract the tourist dollar and encourage residents to use local services and retail facilities. The housing issue is another 30	matter altogether and council plans for introducing out-of- character multi-storey buildings to the suburb have been ill thought out.

As a suburb that draws more tourists than any other in the city, Bayview deserves the considerable investment that the council has proposed. However, it is not for the council to force upon us developments that people here object to, and which we recognize are fundamentally detrimental to the community. Many of us have asked the council for details concerning the anticipated population figures, should their high-density housing projected be enacted, but they appear reluctant to disclose them. We have thus been forced to work it out for 40 disclose them. We have thus been forced to work it out for ourselves. It has been estimated that by building apartment blocks of four to five storeys, the council will facilitate an exponential and undesirable growth in population: 400 homes are likely to rise to 1200 in the North Bayview area and 700 45 cars could turn into 2100; with the increased population 45 cars could turn into 2100; with the increased population impacting heavily on Hillside Road traffic.

D
When it comes to our homes and our offices, why do we seem so willing to accept workmanship that falls way below standard and architecture that is soul-destroying in its bland

50 functionality? It is expert design in conjunction with durable materials and craftsmanship that deserves our attention. The particular number of storeys in a new building is hardly the point. But before proposals to increase housing and retail development are even considered, and the required investment

55 made, the council needs to concede that the Hillside Road situation is intolerable. In order for traffic to actually 'flow', we need two lanes in each direction, on both sides of the junction. A 'park and ride' shuttle service into Bayview would also be of great benefit to the community: commuters would be able

50 to get to their place of employment without the considerable inconvenience and cost of finding a long-term parking space in the downtown area; and in turn this would free up spaces for visitors and tourists, who we must recognize bring in much needed revenue.

Which writer

has a different opinion from the others concerning the proposed housing development?	1 shares writer A's opinion about the accessibility of information to the public regarding the council proposals?	2 expresses a different view from the others on whether council spending on the whole is justified?	3
takes a similar view to writer D on why improved infrastructure is necessary?	4

Reacting to the text

The four writers are all concerned about the impact that population growth might have on their local area.

How would a considerable rise in population affect the area where you live? Would it be a positive or negative development?

Participle clauses

Rewrite the following story using participle clauses and replacing the word 'and' to combine ideas.

Example:

Having grown up in the countryside, Charlie wanted to go back there to spend his retirement.

Charlie had grown up in the countryside and he wanted to go back there to spend his retirement. He looked through a newspaper one day and he saw a cottage for sale in a picturesque rural area. It was situated in a small village near the church and it had a conservatory and a large garden and the garden contained fruit trees; it seemed perfect. Charlie was not known for his decisiveness and he surprised everyone by putting down a deposit on it the very next day. He saw it once and he immediately made up his mind to buy it.

However, he moved into the cottage and he soon realized it was not the peaceful rural idyll he had expected. The church bells chimid every hour on the hour and kept him awake at night. Also, the village was in an area of outstanding heauty and coachloads of tourists arrived every weekend and disturbed the peace and quiet. Worst of all, the locals objected to the presence of outsiders in the village and they were very unfriendly towards him. Charlie lived there for six months and he decided to move back to the city.

Gapped text

• How often do you go to see a performance of a play, a classical music concert or an opera?

Are members of the audience expected to behave in a certain way?

What type of behaviour might other members of the audience find annoying?

You are going to read an article about the way people sometimes behave in the theatre or concert hall. Six paragraphs have been removed from the article. Choose from the paragraphs A-G the one which fits each gap (1-6). There is one extra paragraph which you do not need to use.

THE TROUBLE WITH MODERN AUDIENCES

Stephen Pollard believes that many of us need to be educated in the norms of social conduct – in particular, concert etiquette

According to the reviews, the performance of Mahler's Sixth Symphony that I went to last week was 'transcendent', 'emotionally perfect' and 'violently good'. A friend called me the following morning and told me that it was one of the most powerful experiences of her life.

Sitting in the row in front of me, you see, was the family from hell. I don't know their names, but let's call them the Fidget-Bottoms. Mr and Mrs Fidget-Bottom spent the entire time stroking and kissing their kids, stretching out their arms across the backs of seats as if they were on the sofe at home and, just for good measure, bobbing their heads up and down in time with the music.

I planted a well-aimed kick in the back of the seat but to no avail. A killer combination of the family's total self-absorption, and the seat's wooden solidity, meant that the only effect was a painful toe. So I resorted to another equally fruitless tactic; that of seething with righteous indignation.

Now there is more of a laissez-faire attitude, which, whilst opening up cultural institutions to millions, has its own set of drawbacks.

Today, you come as you please, and behave as you please. It's your right. If you want to flick through your programme, fine. If you want to use it as a fan, go ahead. If you want to cough, feel free.

But we are not at home. The very point of the theatre is to be out of the house, and part of a crowd. And being part of a crowd has its obligations – not shouting 'fire' out of mischief, for example, in a crowded room. When travelling by bus, I do not suddenly begin to indulge myself by singing arias from Handel's Messiah. Nor do I whistle along to the music at weddings at which I am a guest. I behave as is expected of me.

5

As a result we have forgotten – or more truthfully, never learnt – how to listen. When the St Matthew Passion was written, it was heard at Easter, once every very few years. A performance was an event, an event which we had no way of even attempting to recreate. Today, we can record the performance and then listen to it at our leisure in the bath. We can have its choruses playing as background music while we eat or converse with those around us.

It's hardly surprising that we take that behaviour, and that attitude, into the concert hall with us. Mr and Mrs Fidget-Bottom, and the little Fidget-Bottoms, certainly ruined my concert last week, and I am fairly sure they are going to ruin quite a few others as they get older.

- A This particular family may have been especially horrific, but they are merely grotesque extensions of the downside of the increasing accessibility of culture. Admittedly, the old formal rules of behaviour at the theatre, concerts and opera - dressing up in black tie and all that, and the feeling that unless you were part of a closed circle then on no account could you attend - were far too stifling.
- В Rarely, if ever, do we sit down in our own home to listen to a full performance of a piece of music, with no other distractions. And if we do make an attempt, then no sooner have we settled into our armchair. than we think of something else we could be doing - and we do it.
- C Which is more than can be said for the Fidget-Bottoms of the world, who seem oblivious to the norms of social conduct. The problem stems from the fact that culture is now too readily accessible. We simply don't need to make an effort with it. You want to hear Beethoven's Ninth? Just go online. Fancy Vivaldi's Four Seasons? Which version?
  - 固

- D I felt then, as now, that my outburst of temper was justified. What these people. and people like them clearly need, is an education in how to behave in public, beginning with a basic introduction to concert etiquette. On no account should you kiss your children once the concert has started. Indeed, save that for when you get home.
- E I wouldn't know. My body was in the concert hall, and my ears are in full working order. But neither were any use to me. The London Symphony Orchestra might as well have been playing Chopsticks for all the impact the Mahler had on me.
- F Unwrapping sweets, fidgeting, wandering off to the toilet and chatting are also on the list of things you can do during a performance. When going out is as easy, and as normal, as staying in, then we behave the same in the theatre, or the concert hall, as we do in the living room. And so we don't have a thought for those around us.

3 On the speaking exercise on page 204. Reading and speaking: Gap year

1 Read the following paragraph about gap years. Why do you think many UK universities and employers prefer students who have taken a gap year? Is the same true in your country?

Many young people in the UK take a gap year between leaving school and starting university in order to do something different before continuing with their studies. There are various options open to them, either in the UK or abroad, including travel, teaching, carring and conservation work, as well as academic and cultural study courses.

Read the following opinions, which were posted on a gap year website, and compare them with your ideas in exercise 1.

Here are some different experiences that students might encounter in their gap year. Talk to each other about what students might learn from these experiences.

Now decide in which of these situations a student would encounter most problems.

Discuss the following questions:

When talking about the problems you might encounter, try to use some of the vocabulary in section A of the Wordlist on page 208.

- How might parents feel about their children spending their gap year abroad?
- Do you agree that 'Experience is the best teacher'? Why/Why not?
- What has been your most valuable learning experience to date?
- What things can we learn from elderly people and what can we teach them?
- Some people think that young people have too many opportunities nowadays. What would you say to them?

Proposal for the new arts magazine

Introduction

The committee intends to produce a new arts magazine targeted at students attending college. The following are my suggestions for attracting the widest possible readership to the publication.

Reviews

Firstly, I recommend including several reviews per issue. In these, committee members or 'guest writers' could report on local concerts, especially when our own students were performing. We could also review exhibitions and comedy acts if they were offering student concessions.

Q&A interviews

In addition, it would be interesting to feature interviews with graduates who are now working in an arts-related industry. In particular, it might be useful for our current students to hear about the steps people took after leaving college, what their job involves, and to hear about any tips for 'getting your foot in the door'.

Online tutorials

A further idea would be to provide a digital edition of the magazine as well as the print version. This could feature video tutorials, for example, on using Photoshop® for 3D effects.

Launching the magazine

I propose that we promote the magazine via social networking sites and the college website as this will be the most cost-effective way to reach the widest audience. I also think that a promotional page should be running at least three weeks ahead of the first issue so people can contribute articles or use the site to promote their arts events.

Conclusion

I believe our arts magazine could attract a wide readership provided we focus on topics and events that are directly relevant and connected to our own student body.

- 5 Read the model again and underline examples of the following:
  - structures and expressions for making suggestions,
  - e.g. I recommend including ..., 'guest writers' could report on ...
  - linking words and other cohesive devices, e.g. Firstly, In these.
- Now read the task below and write your own proposal in 220-260 words.
  You see the announcement below on the website of The Far Horizons Club, of which you are a member.

The Far Horizons Club is seeking fresh ideas for events and activities that will provide new cultural experiences for members.

The Club Secretary invites you to send a proposal

- suggesting new events or activities that could be held over a weekend.
- explaining how these events or activities would provide a cultural experience.

Write your proposal.

Don't forget!

- Plan your answer by making brief notes on the content of each paragraph.
- Make sure your reader is fully informed. Explain your ideas clearly and give reasons for your suggestions.
- Consider your target reader and use an appropriate register consistently - Include a range of vocabulary and structures.
   Use a variety of linking devices

O Do you enjoy watching wildlife documentaries on television? Why/Why not?

The photographs show Sir David Attenborough, the presenter of many such programmes. What do you think are the qualities of a good wildlife documentary presenter?

2 Read the following magazine article about Sir David Attenborough. For questions 1–6, choose the answer (A, B, C or D) which you think fits best according to the text.

DONGWINT COMES

'This,' says a figure, addressing us from somewhere inside the world's thickest coat, 'is one of the coldest places. On Earth! The emphases are heavy and deliberate, but the voice is like a piano played

- 5 gently, you feel at home with this voice, you know where you are with it, which, on this occasion, is in the High Arctic, on the trail of the Arctic fox, with the temperature hovering somewhere around 50 below. The voice is unmistakably that of Sir David
- 10 Attenberough. The words are those which open The Life of Manimals, Attenberough's latest magnum opus for the BBC.

We are familiar enough with Attenborough's work through previous documentaries to know that a number of things can be guaranteed. He will begin a sentence in, say, Australia and finish it in Brazil. And we will be variously appalled and intrigued by the ways in which mammals hunt, cat and form relationships. As Attenborough says in the introduction to the series, 'We will look at the lives of our closest relatives and they will lead us to ourselves.'

But will they lead us to David Attenborough? In Life on Air, he wrote a 400-page account of his career.

In broadcasting. It is one of the few books ever published to count in the out handling a Caboon.

published to contain tips on handling a Gaboon viper. ('Push a pole under one, about a third of its length from the back of its head, and it will be halanced so that you can gently lift it. Then dump 30 it in a box and slam the lid down very quickly.")

However, its author is far less forthcoming for unyone seeking to know the private man. The death of his wife, dane, which everyone close to Attenborough agrees devastated him, is approached 35 in four serrowful but guarded paragraphs. His brother Richard merits one mention in the book, and that in brackets. Attenborough, it seems, slams the lid down very quickly on subjects of intimacy.

- Not surprisingly, perhaps, he keeps out of the limelight as much as possible, both on and off screen. His determination in this regard is founded in part on genuine anxieties he has about taking credit where it isn't due. Frequently, of course, Attenborough is present when the rare footage of,
- 45 say, the naked mole rat is shot. But at other times he goes nowhere near the animal at all, adding his voice to the footage shot by a cameraman, who has been standing for months in a field in a pair of wet boots. Attenborough, too, has had his fair share of
- 50 long nights spent on forest floors in damp sleeping bags, in disquieting proximity to leeches. Yet the elements of risk and discomfort in his work are things he would prefer to downplay. He considers himself a channel rather than the focus.
- 55 Attenhorough could have had a quieter life. He went to Cambridge in 1945 to read natural sciences and considered becoming an academic. But he eventually gave up on the idea. I know someone who went looking for an animal in Sumagra, he
- for recalls. 'He didn't even see it for the first three years. Went out and looked for it every day. Saw footprints, occasionally a hair. And after he'd found it, that was all he was allowed to look at for another eight years. Another chap I knew had to
- 65 count the number of bees that went into a certain kind of orchid between certain hours of the day. He was stuck out in the middle of the Panama Canal Counting bees. A taricature of the intellectual life, really.
- 70 So, in the hope of finding semething more stimulating, he joined the HBC. He rocketed up through the ranks, lending the best of his energies to wildlife programming, which was then at an unpromisingly larval stage. In the 50s the
- 75 technology wasn't readily available to film in the field, so the natural world had to be borrowed from London Zoo and brought to the studio in a sack.

It gave you five minutes of very cheap programming, in which you showed a python. In 80 the classic tradition of these things, his becoming a presenter was entirely inadvertent, because the person who was to have done the show came down with something.

Ever since then, for over 50 years, he's been 85 doing what comes naturally entertaining and enlightening - and bringing comfort. For his programmes run reassuringly counter to the reflex of our times, which is to mull fearfully over a depressing prospect for the world about us, Seen 90 through Attenhorough's eyes, the planet tends not to be scalded and smoking, breathing its last. It teems and thrives, blossoms and grows. The future in Sir David Attenborough's world is big and bright.

- 1 The writer says that Sir David Attenborough's voice
  - A is not immediately recognizable.
  - B is comforting to the listener.
  - C is distracting to an extent.
  - D is authoritarian in tone.
- 2 What does Attenborough mean in lines 21-22 when he says 'they will lead us to ourselves'?
  - A The mammals will remind us of the value of cooperation in survival.
  - B We will realize how far humans have evolved compared to other species.
  - C The mammals will help us gain an understanding of our own behaviour.
  - D We will uncover more about ourselves than we will about the mammals.
- 3 In his book Life on Air, Attenborough
  - A concedes to having a subjective viewpoint.
  - B provides practical advice on taming animals.
  - C appears indifferent towards family members.
  - D reveals little in regard to his own emotions.
- 4 What are we told about Attenborough in the fourth paragraph?
  - A He has sometimes underestimated the level of danger involved in filming.
  - B He would rather not be the centre of attention in his documentaries.
  - C He is equally fascinated by exotic animals and animals which are familiar.
  - D He takes pride in sharing uncomfortable environments with the film crew.

  - A put the case forward for greater funding for scientific work.
  - B highlight the dedication required to carry out valid investigations.
  - C show which kind of studies have practical applications and which do not.
  - D illustrate how futile some academic research can be.
- 6 What does the writer say about Attenborough's early days at the BBC?
  - A He became the host of wildlife programmes by chance.
  - B The company was reluctant to invest in certain technology.
  - C His promotion in the company was a long time in coming.
  - D His programmes were not always well-received by the public.

Language focus 2: Modal verbs 3: Must, need, should and ought to

- 1 Which of the speakers in the listening said each of these two groups of sentences?
  - A 1 We had to do exactly the same work.
    - 2 There must have been about 500 of us altogether.
    - 3 We should have done it years before.
  - B 1 I thought at first they might not accept me because of my age and inexperience, but I needn't have worried.
    - 2 I didn't need to have any special skills.
- 2 Sor each group of sentences, explain the difference in meaning between the words in bold as they are used by the speaker.
- 3 Which of the sentences in exercise 1 do not contain a modal verb? What are the main characteristics of a modal verb?

In which sentence could ought to be used instead of one of the words in bold, without changing the meaning?

- 4 Explain the difference in meaning between the words in bold as they are used in the following sentences.
  - I really must be going my son should be home from school soon and I have to take him to his swimming class.
  - b I know you shouldn't tell lies, but you don't have to tell him the whole truth, either. You mustn't let him know you've been here.
- 5 Usually, there is no difference in meaning between needn't and don't need to. However, needn't tends to be used to give permission not to do something, and don't need to is used more often to talk about general necessity.

You needn't do it now - we're in no hurry.

You don't need to be tall to be a good basketball player.

Rewrite each of the two sentences so that the meaning is positive, is the modal or non-modal form of need required?

Read more about the verbs in this section in the Grammar reference on pages 223 and 224.

Practice

- Underline the correct alternatives in the following sentences.
   Either one, two or all three alternatives may be possible.
  - I cleaned the flat specially for tonight, but I mustn't/ needn't/shouldn't have bothered.
  - You really must/need/should do something about your handwriting.
  - 3 What do you have/ought/need to do to become famous?
  - 4 I'm meeting my partner's parents for the first time tomorrow. What needloughtishould I wear?
  - 5 We're going into town, but you needn't/don't need tol don't have to come if you don't want to.
  - 6 They ought to/must/should have got there by now. Why haven't they phoned?
  - 7 I really needed to study/must have studied/ought to have studied hard at the weekend, but I did absolutely nothing.
  - 8 If you should/ought to/need to happen to see my ex-boss there, can you give him my regards?
- 2 Choose four of the sentences from exercise 1 and have four separate conversations with your partner, using a different sentence to start each conversation. Remember to say your first sentence with one of the correct alternatives.

Vocabulary 2: Attitude adverbials

The adverbs in the following extracts from the reading text on pages 156 and 157 express the writer's attitude or opinion.

The voice is unmistakably that of Sir David Attenborough.

Not surprisingly, perhaps, he keeps out of the limelight as much as possible ... For his programmes run reassuringly counter to the reflex of our times ...

In sentences 1-5 underline the best alternative.

- I Local residents have condemned the decision to build the factory, and rightly/ undoubtedly/clearly so, in my opinion.
- 2 Strangely/Apparently/Presumably enough. I find myself agreeing with the government on this issue.
- 3 Fortunately/Disappointingly/Conveniently for us, it was an unusually warm winter and we couldn't go skiing on the hills as we'd hoped.

Collaborative task

1 Look at the photos of people learning to read and write in different ways. How do you think the people are feeling?

2 Here are some things that schools can do to help improve literacy standards in children.

Talk to your partner about how useful these approaches might be in improving literacy standards.

3 Now decide which approach you think children would most enjoy.

Further discussion

Discuss the following questions:

- How important is it for children to spend time reading fiction?
- Whose responsibility is it to encourage children to read and write teachers or parents?
- Do you think it is important to study literature at school? Why/Why not?
- Some people think that certain modern forms of communication have had a negative effect on people's writing ability. What do you think?

Writing

Essay

Read the following Part 1 Essay task below. Then, with a partner, decide which two methods you want to discuss. For each method, make notes on what specific points and suggestions you want to make.

Your class has attended a panel discussion on what methods schools should use to improve literacy standards. You have made the notes below:

Methods schools should use to improve literacy Some opinions expressed in the discussion: standards We want children to read and write for the pleasure of it, not - testing because they have to." technology 'The Internet allows children to access a great range. volunteer schemes of books." 'Some companies already encourage employees to help out in schools with reading and writing programmes."

Write an essay for your tutor discussing two of the methods in your notes. You should explain which method you think is more important for schools to consider, giving reasons in support of your answer.

You may, if you wish, make use of the opinions expressed in the discussion, but you should use your own words as far as possible.

Write your answer in 220-260 words in an appropriate style.

Introduction

The Speaking paper consists of four parts and lasts 15 minutes. You will probably take the test with one other candidate, though it is possible to be part of a group of three. There are two examiners: the interlocutor, who conducts the test and asks the questions, and the assessor, who listens to the test and assesses your performance. The interlocutor also assesses and contributes to your final mark.

In the following advice to candidates, complete each gap with a word from the box.

- If your partner appears reticent, try to involve them by asking questions or inviting them to give their (10) _____.

Part 1: Social interaction

In Part 1 the interlocutor will ask you questions about yourself.

1 Work in groups of three. One of you is the interlocutor and the other two are candidates. You have two minutes to do the following task.

What to expect in the exam-

- Part 1 lasts approximately two minutes.
- Questions will be asked from a range of topics including, for example, interests, daily life, family and holidays.
- You may respond to the other candidate's comments, though you are not actively invited to do so by the interlocutor

Interlocutor

 Ask the candidates one or more questions from at least two of the categories on page 167. You may ask each candidate the same or different questions.

Candidates

 Answer the questions from the interlocutor as fully as possible, giving reasons for your ideas and opinions.

English

How long have you been learning English? What are your main reasons for learning English?

Which aspect of learning English do you find hardest?

Leisure time

What do you enjoy doing in your free time?

How important is sport and fitness in your life?

Do you like spending time alone?

Travel and holidays

What is one of the most interesting places you have visited? Do you prefer going on holiday with your friends or your family? Where would you most like to travel to?

House and home

What do you enjoy most about living where you do? If you could afford your ideal home, what would it be like? Would you ever consider living abroad?

The past

What were you doing this time vesterday? What are some of your earliest childhood memories? What have been some of the happiest moments in your life?

Future plans

What are you most looking forward to doing in the next few months? What do you hope to achieve in the next three years? Do you usually plan your weekends well in advance?

When you have finished, change roles and repeat the exercise with different questions.

- 2 (1) 2.30 Listen to two students. Jan and Ana, doing the Part 1 task and comment on their performance. Consider the following:
  - how well each student develops their responses.
  - the range and accuracy of their language

Part 2: Long turn

In Part 2 your are given the opportunity to speak for one minute, without interruption, about some pictures. Your partner then has 30 seconds to comment briefly on your pictures by answering a question.

Your partner then speaks for one minute. about a different set of pictures, after which you have 30 seconds to comment briefly on them.

Task One

Look at the following Part 2 task.

Work in pairs. Look at these pictures. They show people who are checking the time.

Student A:

Compare two of the pictures, and say why the people might be checking the time and how much influence time might have in their daily lives.

Student B:

When your partner has finished talking, answer the following question about all three pictures. For which person do you think time has the greatest influence in their daily life?

- Why might the people be checking. the time?
- · How much influence might time have in their daily lives?

What to expect in the exam-

During your minute in Part 2, you have to compare two of the three photographs you are given, whilst at the same time speculating and giving your opinion about some aspect of their content.

Ready for Speaking

- 2 How well does each candidate a-c approach the task in exercise 1? Comment on each extract, giving examples to justify your opinions.
  - a This woman is in the kitchen or perhaps the dining room with her son. She's checking the time because maybe she's late. I think she's a businesswoman. This woman is an athlete in a race. She's checking the time because she wants to know how first she's running. I think time has a big influence in her life because ...
  - b I'm going to talk about this picture here which shows an athlete, then this one here which shows a warman and her son. If I have time, I'll speak about the one here with the little girl and her toy watch. Well, all three pictures show women, well, women and a girl, checking the time. This woman is an athlete and I think she is looking at her watch to ...
  - c The pictures of the working mother and the athlete both convey the idea of racing against the clock, a need or desire to do something within a certain period of time. The mother looks rather stressed, suggesting something unexpected has happened. She might be phoning the office to let them know she'll be late because her car won't start, or her som's fallen ill. The athlete, on the other hand, is probably...
- 3 Now you are ready to do the task.

Task Two

- 1 Change roles from Task One. Turn to page 204.
- 2 (2) 2.31 Listen to Jan and Ana doing the Part 2 tasks.
  - · How well do they each complete their main one-minute task?
  - · How varied is the language they use?

Part 3: Collaborative task

In Part 3, the interlocutor does not take part, but listens while you and your partner perform a problem-solving task together for about three minutes in total.

You are given written prompts, which form the basis for the task, and are asked to exchange ideas and opinions, make evaluations and/or speculate for about two minutes.

The examiner will then ask you a second, related question which requires you to try and reach a decision with your partner. You have one minute to do this.

How to go about H

- Don't simply agree with your partner or repeat his or her ideas. Express your own opinions or develop your partner's points by adding further comments of your own.
- In Task 1 you can talk about the different areas (in this case, jobs) in any order you choose. If y to talk about each one, developing your ideas and giving reasons for your opinions.
- In Task 2 you don't have to reach a final decision together, but it is important that the examiner hears you working towards an agreement.

- Avoid long silences and frequent pauses.
- Paraphrase if you cannot remember a particular word.

Here are some different jobs.

Talk to each other about what the most and least satisfying aspects of these jobs might be.

- Now decide which job is usually regarded as having the most status.
- 3 (3) 2.32 Listen to Jan and Ana doing the Part 3 task and answer these questions.
  - How well do Jan and Ana interact with each other in the two tasks?
  - Do they reach a final decision in the second task?

Part 4: Further discussion

In Part 4 the interlocutor asks further questions related to the issues raised in Part 3. As well as responding to these questions, you should also interact with your partner and comment on what he or she says.

- Discuss the following questions with your partner:
  - . Which would you prefer to have: a job which is well paid but monotonous or one which is poorly paid but fulfilling? Why?
  - Do you think that school prepares young people adequately for the world of work? Why/Why not?
  - What difficulties do young people in your area face when searching for work?
  - What do you think is the ideal age to retire? Why?
  - How has computer technology affected the world of work?
  - Do you think people who earn large amounts of money have a moral obligation to donate money to charity? Why/Why not?
- 2 (2) 2.33 Listen to Jan and Ana doing the Part 4 task.
  - How well do they each react to what each other says?

What to expect in the exam

- This section lasts approximately five minutes.
- The interlocutor's questions usually become broader and more abstract as the discussion develops.
- The interlocutor may direct a question to one candidate in particular, or else ask an open question for either candidate to answer.

- - A video of the Speaking test covered in this unit can be found on the Ready for Advanced Practice Online website.

Food for thought

Vocabulary 1: Eating and drinking

1 All the verb phrases in each of the groups 1-8 below can be used in combination with one of the nouns in the box. Write an appropriate noun from the box in each of the spaces. There is an example at the beginning (0).

- 2 Study the collocations in exercise 1 for two minutes. Then look at the nouns in the box and cover the exercise. How many collocations can you remember?
- 3 Use five of the collocations to write sentences about yourself and/or people you know.

Example:

Whenever I come home after a trip away, my mother prepares my favourite dish of lamb chops and fried potatoes.

Compare and discuss your sentences with another student.

Long turn (

Look at these photos. They show people who are eating meals in different situations.

Student A:

Compare two of the pictures, and say what considerations might have been taken into account when planning for the meals and how much the people might be enjoying them.

Student B:

When your partner has finished talking, say which meal you think would be more satisfying.

Student A

Some of the following considerations might be relevant to the photos you choose. Can you think of any more?

Note the use of modal veros in the instructions: might have been taken into account and might be enjoying. Use a range of language to speculate about the photographs.

Your comment should be brief, but you do have time to give reasons for your feelings or opinions.

- · What considerations might have been taken into account when planning for the meals?

  • How much might the people be enjoying them?

2 Now change roles. Follow the instructions again using the remaining pictures.

Word formation

For questions 1–8, read the text below. Use the word given in capitals at the end of some of the lines to form a word that lifs in the gap in the same line. There is an example at the beginning (0). Write your answers IN CAPITAL LETTERS.

2 Tell your partner about three very different places in which you have eaten meals.

What kind of food did you eat? To what extent was your enjoyment of the food influenced by the surroundings?

Writing 1

Informal letter

Read the following Part 2 task and the sample answer on page 173. Do you agree with the advice given? Is there anything else you would add?

A friend of yours has been given the task of organizing the food for a forthcoming event or activity and knows that you have some experience of a similar situation. The friend has written to you, expressing some anxiety about the task and asking for your help.

Write a letter giving advice on those aspects of the food arrangements which you consider to be most important and reassuring your friend of his/her ability to cope.

You should write 220-260 words.

Dear Graham

Great to hear from youlitie hand to believe that Luke's about to colebrate his fifth birthday. You're very brave to organize the party all by yourself! Im not surprised you're a bit dounted by it all. Still, with Liz being away, I suppose you haven't got much choice.

I can certainly bass on some tips that Hearnt from my own bitter experience in September. First of all don't make the same mistake as laid and lay on a huge spread. Children are fussy eaters and tend not to have big appetites, so there's no point preparing vasit quantities of elaborate food. They probably won't eat it. You'd be better off filling a few bowls with different flavoured. crisps - they were the first things to disappear at Lara's party.

That's not to say you shouldn't out out other things for them to eat—some sweet some savoury – but it's not worth going to a lot of trouble over it. And don't be surprised if they don't eat the birthday cake. Lara's friends hardly touched hers, so I wouldn't spend hours making one if I were you - buy one from a shop and you won't be disappointed.

And finally, whatever you do, make cure you don't let them have the food until after the games. Children running around on full stomache is not to be recommended!

Acyway, I'm sure Luke and his friends will have a great time, even if it leaves you utterly exhausted. Let me know how it all goes, won't you?

All the best

I am tempted to call his bluff. I ought to spend the first five minutes of my speaking time tipping the contents of these bottles down my throat. But, in practice, I never touch them. It just so happens that 20 I have never been gagging with thirst while being introduced as a speaker. Don't get me wrong, when I am thirsty, I have a drink: ideally, apple juice, because I prefer something with a taste. Above all, I drink tea - no fewer than half a dozen cups a day.

25 I find the bottled water fad to be a distressing instance of mass hypnotism, so when the remarks of an Australian scientist were reported last week, they represented to me a series of nails being hit firmly on the head. Dr Spero Tsindos 30 resoundingly pronounced that bottled water has become 'a fashion accessory and a token of instant gratification'. Unfortunately, the British public is not so sensible. Sales of bottled water have ascended continually since the 1980s apart from 35 a brief dip from 2006-2010. This was probably accounted for by a backlash against hottled water at the glibness of the whole phenomenon, whose only tangible result is a mountain of landfill. Restaurants that refused to serve tap water were 40 condemned and often shamed out of the practice. But notwithstanding the fact that it doesn't flush toxins out of the body, improve the skin, or taste better than tap water, people now consume more

45 I suspect that the appeal of a small bottle of water is that it is not a glass of wine. 'Look,' the water carrier proclaims, 'I am not drinking alcohol!' (at least, not right now). The water bottle is a priggish symbol of purity and piety, and insofar as this is radiated 50 externally, it is a reproof to the person daring to drink wine in the presence of the water-drinker. Insofar as it is not radiated, then the water-drinker is claiming moral points for being conscious of their own well-being. The other reason I can't stand 55 bottled water is that it seems unpatriotic. Since the 1980s, our traditional four cups of tea a day have apparently dropped to three. But let's quickly eliminate one suspect in the case of the lost cup. At first glance, it might appear to be coffee when we 50 notice the proliferation of high street coffee shops. But sales show that the culprit is actually bottled water, and to a lesser extent, fruit juice.

Why should we be celebrating tea? Being 99 per cent water, it has all the hydrating virtues of bottled 68 water but with a bonus, namely the tea itself, which provides a moderate dose of cerebrally-stimulating caffeine (the best thing you can do before an exam is drink a cup of tea). It is also rich in flavonoid antioxidants, which aid cardiovascular fitness 70 and tea leaves applied externally can act as an antiseptic, as monkeys in the jungle know very well. And unlike bottled water, tea requires the boiling of water, and it is said that tea consumption enabled the concentrations of population necessary 75 for urban living in the 18th century, when metropolitan water supplies were not clean.

As a child, I was involved in a serious car crash, and I could not speak from shock until a woman - a complete stranger, and angelic in my memory se - came up with a cup of sweet, milky tea. I doubt that a bottle of water would have done the trick. Tea is associated with an enjoyable and very social ritual, but imagine the sheer crassness of a host who inquired, 'More bottled water, anyone?' Tea is our national common denominator, and it would be helpful in these uncertain times if it could be allied to our other such symbol, namely a certain Elizabeth, But I fear that Her Majesty is invariably accompanied on her travels by bottles of mineral

B Qualifying comparisons

Many words and phrases can be used to qualify comparisons.

Examples:

Peaches are significantly/three times/slightly more expensive than last year.

There isn't nearlythalfiquite as much on the menu as there used to be.

Underline the correct alternative in the following sentences.

- a Food is often a great deal/a large amount/a high number less important than the environment in which it is eaten.
- b My brother eats a lot offby farlfar more chocolate than is good for him.
- c It claims to be a health cereal, but it contains justinear/ same as much salt as ordinary cereals.
- d I only weigh slightly/little/bit less than I did when I started this diet.
- e It's more/much/very healthier to cook without salt.

C Like and as

Like is used with nouns, pronouns or gerunds to make comparisons.

As is used with nouns to indicate someone or something's job, role or function.

I got a job as a waitress in a restaurant last summer. We worked like slaves.

He found a piece of wood shaped like a telephone and used it as a hammer.

Both as and like can be used with clauses to make comparisons, although like is informal and considered incorrect by some.

She walked down the aisle of St Anne's, just as/like her mother had done 30 years before.

Multiple choice 2.34-2.36

Where do people usually buy their fruit, vegetable and meat products in your country?

How popular are farmers' markets like the one in the photo?

In Britain, it's common for children to eat in a school canteen. What did you do for lunch when you were at school? What do you think of the meal in the bottom photo?

Why is it important for food to be packaged nowadays? What's your reaction to the photo of the packaged apples?

You will hear three different extracts. For questions 1-6, choose the answer (A, B or C) which fits best according to what you hear. There are two questions for each extract.

Extract One

You hear part of a radio discussion in which two people are talking about farmers' markets.

- 1 The man feels that farmers' markets are gaining in popularity because
  - A there has been a resurgence of interest in traditional foods.
  - B people have come to prefer locally grown produce.
  - C the produce sold here is perceived to be healthy.
- 2 Both speakers say that anyone hoping to set up a market stall
  - A needs to consider what shoppers want.
  - B should focus on the presentation of goods.
  - C must offer diversity in their range of products.

Extract Two

You overhear two students talking about their presentation on the food industry.

- 3 What does the woman say about food packaging?
  - A It must show the different ingredients of a product more clearly.
  - B It should only be used on certain products.
  - C It can generate a great deal of waste.
- 4 The man believes that the use of packaging is an essential means of
  - A reducing advertising costs for food producers.
  - B preventing contamination of food products.
  - C conveying health-related facts to consumers.

Extract Three

You hear part of a radio interview in which two people are discussing a new policy concerning food at school.

- 5 What does the woman feel about the new policy?
  - A It will be impossible to put into practice.
  - B It will fail to achieve the desired results.
  - C It will put additional pressure on schools.
- 6 What does the man believe is the main cause of childhood obesity?
  - A poor role models at home
  - B the wide availability of unhealthy food
  - C a lack of information on healthy eating
- (I) How healthily do people generally eat in your country?

What changes have there been in eating habits in recent years?

Language focus 2: Adverbs of degree

- Look at the following phrases from Extract One of the listening.
  - a I'm absolutely delighted that ...
  - b ... celebrity chefs have had a fairly large hand in this.
  - c ... it's a bit vague, that label ...
  - d ... it's very interesting to see ...

Absolutely is not normally used with the adjectives in b. c.or d. Nor are fairly, a bit, very used with the adjective in a. Why is this?

What other adverbs of degree can be used with the adjectives in b, c and d?

Which of the following adjectives are gradable (used with very, fairly, etc) and which are non-gradable (used with absolutely)?

Example:

Gradable: tasty Non-gradable: starving

	tasty	starving	frightened	pleased	l huge
1	furious	dirty	ridiculous	tired	incredible

- 3 What is the meaning of quite in these two sentences?
  - a This fish is quite tasty.
  - b This fish is quite delicious.
- 4 There are a number of other adverbs which can be used to intensify or emphasize adjectives, as in these examples.

The tap water here is perfectly safe to drink. The water in this river is highly toxic to fish. I am fully conscious of the risks involved in swimming here.

In 1—6, cross out the adjective which does not normally collocate with the adverb at the beginning of the line. There is an example at the beginning (0).

0	perfectly	clear dependent	normal capable
1	highly	gifted talented	promising dever
2	fully	aware booked	worried equipped
3	wholly	informed inadequate	inappropriate unacceptable
4	entirely	free of charge
5	utterly	ridiculous qualified	opposed disgraceful
6	totally		unexpected intelligent

- 5 Control Tell your partner about a time when you were
  - absolutely terrified.
  - · completely lost.
  - · utterly exhausted.
  - · highly motivated.
  - · totally wrong.
  - extremely embarrassed.

Report

You have been asked to write a report for an international survey about eating habits in your country. Your report should address these three questions:

- How have eating habits changed in your country in recent years?
- How positive are these changes?
- What developments may take place in the future?

Write your report in 220-260 words.

Hew to go about it

Consider all three questions in the task and make notes under headings such as the following:

Eating with family vs eating alone

Health foods

Traditional food vs fast food

Eating times

The headings you choose will depend on the situation in your country.

Write a paragraph plan. Two possible alternatives are:

Formal letter

Choose one of the following Part 2 tasks, A or B. Read the relevant Content advice for your chosen task.

A Your company has decided to offer a period of work experience to a student in a local school. You have been asked by your manager to write a letter to the principal of the school.

Your letter should explain

- what your company does.
- what the work experience would involve.
- what kind of student would be suitable.

Write your letter in 220-260 words.

A Content advice

When explaining what your company does, use this opportunity to use a wide range of vocabulary which is related specifically to your organization/field.

When describing the work experience, consider what kind of things the student would be asked to do, what kind of training might be given, and how the experience would benefit the student.

When writing about what kind of student would be suitable; think about the personal qualities and skills a young person would need to do the work you are offering.

B Your college is soon going to close for the summer and you would like to have some work experience during this time. You decide to write a letter to the manager of a local business to ask about possible work experience opportunities.

Your letter should explain

- why you are writing.
- what skills and qualities you have.
- · what sort of work you are suited to.

Write your letter in 220-260 words.

B Content advice

Think about what kind of skills you have at the moment; for example, if you have computerprogramming skills, then you might decide to apply to a business that needs help with computer programming. If you have good communication skills, you might apply to a business that needs help dealing with telephone enquiries.

What kind of qualities would make you attractive to the manager of a local business? For example, most managers would prefer someone who is eager to learn, reliable, hard-working, etc.

Remember that you are only enquiring about work experience, not a permanent job. Be realistic about the sort of work or duties you expect to be offered.

Useful language

Complete each of the following sentences with one of the phrases from the box.

Gapped text

Have you ever had an argument over money or spending?

What effect do you think money can have on people's relationships with others?

You are going to read part of an article about the psychological effect that money has on our behaviour. Six paragraphs have been removed from the extract. Choose from the paragraphs A-G the one which fits each gap (1-6). There is one extra paragraph which you do not need to use.

Money - that's what I want!

Money has a far more complex hold on us than most economists are willing to admit. Mark Buchanan tries to find out why.

Cash, currency, greenbacks, dosh. Just words, you might say, but they carry an eerie psychological force. Chew them over for a few moments, and you will become a different

- 5 person. Simply thinking about money seems to make us more self-reliant and less inclined to help others. And it gets weirder; just handling cash can take the sting out of social rejection and even diminish physical pain, according to recent
- 10 psychological studies.

Yet money stirs up more stress and envy than any other tool ever could. We just can't seem to deal with it rationally. But why? Our relationship with money has many facets. Some people seem

- 15 addicted to accumulating it, whilst others can't help maxing out their credit cards and find it impossible to save for a rainy day. As we come to understand more about money's effect on us, it is emerging that some people's brains can react to it
- 20 as they would to a drug, while to others it is like a friend.

On the surface, this might seem unnecessary. Surely money is just cold, unemotional stuff? We know already that it takes a variety of forms,

- 25 from feathers of old, through gold coins, and dollar bills to data in a bank's computer. The value of $100 is supposed to lie in how much food or fuel it can purchase and nothing else. You should no more care about being short changed
- 30 $5 at the supermarket checkout than losing the same amount when borrowing money to buy a $300 000 house.

To understand how this affects our behaviour, some economists are starting to think more

- 35 like evolutionary anthropologists. Daniel Ariely of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology is one of them. He suggests that modern society presents us with two distinct sets of behavioural rules. Social standards of behaviour, which are
- 40 'warm and fuzzy', are designed to foster long-term relationships, trust and cooperation.

Economic exchange has been going on throughout human history, so it is possible that our ancestors evolved an instinctive capacity for 45 recognizing the difference between situations suited to these different behavioural rules, and that this could have developed well before the invention of money. Alternatively, we may have learnt the distinction.

- 53 Kathleen Vohs and colleagues at the University of Minnesota got student volunteers to complete an activity in which they had to arrange a series of discs into two patterns. But before doing this, they were asked to make sensible phrases either
- 55 from a group of words that had nothing to do with money or from a group of money-related words.

Vohs suggests there is a simple dynamic at work here, 'Money makes people feel self-sufficient,' she says. 'They are more likely to put forth effort to attain personal goals, and they also prefer to be separate from others. The touchy-feely side of us may disapprove of such behaviour, but it is useful for survival.

- A In reality we are not that rational, Instead of treating cash simply as a tool to be wielded with objective precision, we allow money to reach inside our heads and tap into the ancient emotional parts of our brain, often with unpredictable results.
- В This is all the stranger when you consider what money is supposed to be: nothing more than a medium of exchange that makes economic life more efficient. Just as an axe allows us to chop down trees, money allows us to have markets that, traditional economists tell us, dispassionately set the price of anything from a loaf of bread to a painting by Picasso.
- C The trick is to get the correct balance between these two mindsets. Psychological studies have found a general trade-off between the pursuit of extrinsic aspirations such as wealth and fame and intrinsic ones, such as building and maintaining relationships.

- D Either way, we appear immediately and subconsciously to recognize the cues associated with the realm of market norms. Experiments published recently reveal that even a passing contact with concepts linked to money puts us into a market-oriented mentality, making us think and behave in characteristic ways.
- E Then there is a set of market norms. These revolve around money and competition, and encourage individuals to put their own interests first.
- And, of course, whichever way we regard it, having a pile of money means that you can buy more things, so it is virtually synonymous with status - so much so that losing it can lead to severe depression. In these cash-strapped times, perhaps by developing an insight into the psychology of money, we can improve the way we deal with it.
- It turned out that those who had been G primed with the latter set worked on the main task for far longer before asking for help. In a related experiment, these individuals were also significantly less likely to help anyone asking for assistance.

4 Describe five situations to illustrate five different collocations from exercises 1-3.
Do not mention the collocations; your partner will try to guess which ones you have illustrated.

Example:

There was a protest meeting at my workplace last week. The unions were expecting it to be well attended, but only four or five members of the staff bothered to turn up.

[Answer: a handful of people]

Long turn 🔘

The pictures below show people who are thinking about buying something.

Compare two of the pictures and say what the people might be hoping to buy and what might affect their decision.

Ready for Writing

Introduction

In the Writing paper you have to complete two different writing tasks in 1 hour 30 minutes; the compulsory Part 1 task and another from a choice of three in Part 2. For each task, you are expected to write between 220 and 260 words.

In Part 1 you are asked to write an essay in response to a proposition to discuss. The proposition is accompanied by a text which takes the form of notes made during a seminar, lecture or panel discussion.

In Part 2, you could be asked to write one of the following; an email or letter, a proposal, a report or a review.

Marking

When marking answers in the Writing paper, as part of the general assessment criteria, examiners consider the features in the box. Match each feature to the general advice and information in a-i below. The first one has been done for you.

Content	Target reader	Accuracy
Range	Organization and	d cohesion

1 Range	<ul> <li>a Use a variety of language appropriate to this level.</li> <li>b Avoid repetition of vocabulary wherever possible.</li> </ul>
2	<ul> <li>c Ensure that your answer addresses all the points in the task.</li> <li>d In Part 1 you do not always need to use all the information you are given.</li> </ul>
3	Write in clear paragraphs of a suitable length.     Points need to be appropriately ordered and connected.
4	<ul> <li>g Write your answer in a register which is appropriate to the task and the intended audience.</li> <li>h Adopt a suitable tone for your piece of writing to produce the desired effect.</li> </ul>
5	Avoid making too many mistakes, particularly basic ones or ones which prevent understanding.

Planning and checking

The sentences below show the stages to follow when planning and checking your written work. Match each stage 1–9 to the piece of general advice in a–i on page 194 to which it corresponds.

Example: 1 c

- 1 Read the task at least twice, underlining key information and requirements.
- 2 Select appropriately from the information in the input material.
- 3 Decide whether you should use more formal or informal English.
- 4 Check whether the task requires you to achieve a specific aim such as persuading, reassuring, apologizing or justifying.
- 5 Make a list of ideas for your answer, then select the best ones and arrange them into logical groupings.
- 6 Note down words and expressions which might be suitable for linking your ideas.
- 7 Write down relevant words, collocations and structures which you might be able to include in your answer.
- 8 Think of synonyms for key words which are likely to occur more than once in your answer.
- 9 When you have written your answer, check spelling, punctuation and grammar.

Register

Below are two versions of the same letter, each one written in a different register. Use the information in the informal letter to complete the numbered gaps in the formal version. The words you need do not occur in the informal letter. Write one word in each gap. The exercise begins with an example (0).

2 Use the two letters to identify some of the differences between formal and informal language.

Example:

The informal letter contains contractions such as 'you'd', 'I'm' and 'we'll whereas the formal version does not.

Models and tasks

On the following pages you will find a model for each of the main task types, together with an additional task. You should answer the Part 1 task on page 197, and at least one of the Part 2 tasks. Read the relevant model, then follow stages 1–9 in the Planning and checking section on page 195. In order to help you demonstrate a good range of vocabulary you should select appropriately from the Useful language section.

Part 1: Essay

Your class has recently watched a television documentary on ways for governments to reduce traffic congestion. You have made the notes below:

to reduce traffic congestion public transport road building legislation Ways for governments Some opinions expressed in the documentary: Maybe people would use buses if there were more of them. We need fewer cars on the road, not more. There should be limits on where and when you can drive.

Write an essay for your tutor discussing two of the ways in your notes. You should explain which way you think is more important for governments to consider, giving reasons in support of your answer.

You may, if you wish, make use of the opinions expressed in the discussion, but you should use your own words as far as possible.

opening statement to engage the reader's interest —

Tackling traffic congestion: what should be done?

At the beginning of the 20th century, a car was a luxury that many could not afford, but since then, the number of vehicles on the streets of industrialized countries has soared. The simple fact is that most urban areas were never designed to cope with such high levels of traffic. It seems ironic that as car ownership has increased, the quality of life for people living in cities has, in some ways, diminished. Traffic congestion creates stress, pollution and many types of health problem. It is an issue that governments must address.

One approach that policy-makers could take is to introduce more legislation regulating the use of private vehicles. In certain countries, for example, drivers are required to pay a toll once they cross the boundary of the city centre. In some cases, car drivers are also restricted to using one lane only, leaving the other lanes for buses or taxis. Unfortunately, there is evidence that neither of these measures has reduced traffic to any significant extent.

An alternative approach would be to make public transport more attractive to potential passengers. According to a recent online poll, it is inconvenience rather than cost which deters people from using buses. Local authorities would therefore need to provide a much wider range of bus routes, and run far more frequent services.

In conclusion, an improved public transport system would certainly require considerable financial investment, but in the long term, it might be a cheaper option than borrowing money to fund new road-building projects. This is the strategy that I would recommend governments adopt.

The housing situation for young people in my country

Introduction

The aim of this report is to examine the various housing potions open to people in their early 20s in my country and the difficulties encountered with each one. It will also consider likely future developments in the housing situation for young people here.

Buylno a property

Property operabilition are searing inflation have put house prices beyond the reach of the majority of first-time outers. The few who do manage to reise the money for the deposition a small flat, are likely to experience problems obtaining a mortgage. Banks are uncolling to limit money to anyone without a permanent contract, comething which most young workers can only dream of.

Renting

An obvious alternative is to rent a property. However, rents, like house prices, have risen dramatically, forcing low-samers to share. For many 20-somethings this can prove an enjoyable experience, but some soon discover that they are I not suited to living with others. Local authorities provide some low-cost rented accommodation specifically for young single people, but this tends to be in very short supply.

Living with parents

It is hardly surprising then, that a significant proportion of school and college & leavers opt to continue fiving in the parental home until they have saved enough money to buy a place of their own. This may take some time, however, and friction between parents and children can result.

Fuzzire developments

As long as fouse prices continue to increase, the outlook for young people here will remain bleak. Only a substantial fall in property values will improve the situation and this seems unlikely in the near future.

'Lost Corobous' by Hank Wangford

Did you realize that there were no horses or cows in the Americas until Columbus introduced them on his return visit in 1494? Or that the first cowboys were not those of North America, but the gauches', husses "llaneres and vaqueres of Argentina, Chile, Venezuela and Mexico?" Leertaining didn't, until Fread Hank Wangford's revealing study of cowbog culture from Palagonia in South America to the Alamo in Texas.

₹ The book is full of interesting facts and stories about combay herees who were previously. anknown to me. One such man was Martin Mieuel de Güernes, who in 1806 rode with 50. other gauches into the waters of the River Plate and captured a British ship which had run aground there. The event is narrated with Wangford's characteristic sease of humour, which will & have you laughing our load from the very beginning of the book,

And if you're not a great coursey fan, don't be pay off by the tide. Lost Courseys' does more than simply trace the history of cattlemen on horseback it provides a hist nating insight into the customs, food, music, geography and wildlife of a whole continent. There's something for everyone in the book, from extinusiastic and world descriptions of the scenery, to information on dances and singing traditions, such as the gaucho 'payadas' - thad no idea you could have a direl with the voice as your only weapon!

Lost Comboys' is an excellent read. It is both entertaining and educational and thighly recommend it to anyone who is interested in travel books.

Unit 1

Modal verbs 1: might, could, may and can

might, could and may can be used to express present, future and past possibility:

Try the shop on the corner - they might have what you're looking for.

Economists warn that house prices could rise even further next year.

She may not have received your letter yet.

The addition of well after the modal verb expresses more probability.

Take an umbrella - it may/could/might well rain later on.

- 2 might and could can be used to express:
  - past possibility which did not happen We could have won the game, but Joe missed a penalty. It's a good thing I was wearing a crash helmet. I might have been seriously injured.
  - annovance

You could at least say you're sorry!

He might have told me he was going to be late!

- 3 might and may can be used to:
  - express concession

He might have failed his degree, but he's earning much more than me.

(= Although he failed his degree, he's earning much more than me.

She may be very famous, but that doesn't give her the right to behave like that in public.

· suggest what one should do when there is no better alternative

I might as well go shopping with my parents - I've got nothing else to do.

You'll find out the truth sooner or later, so I may as well tell you now what happened.

- can and may (more formal) can be used to:
  - give or refuse permission

You may/can borrow up to three DVDs at any one time from the library.

You can't/may not go until you have finished.

May I be of assistance?

Can I carry that for you?

- can and could can be used to:
  - make requests

Can/Could you give me a hand, please?

ask for permission

Can/Could I open the window?

The more formal may can also be used. May I ask a personal question?

can and could, in the negative form, can be used to express certainty:

She can't be more than about 20 years old.

It couldn't have been a bear that we saw - it was far too small.

- can can be used to express:
  - · theoretical possibility

The new concert hall can seat over 3000 people.

ability or inability

I can understand some Italian, but I can't speak it very well.

criticism

She can say some very hartful things sometimes.

8 could can be used to express:

ability or inability in the past My late grandfather could play the banjo, but he couldn't

When we talk about ability to do something on one occasion in the past, could is not possible. Instead, was/ were able to, managed to or succeeded in have to be used. I managed to speak to Frank last night, but I couldn't persuade him to come to the opera with us.

permission or prohibition in the past When I was at school the boys couldn't wear earnings, but the girls could.

When we talk about permission to do something on one occasion in the past, be allowed to has to be used. I was allowed to leave work early yesterday to go and meet my husband at the airport.

Unit 2

Talking about the past

1 Past simple

The past simple can be used to refer to:

- completed actions, events or situations which happened at a specific time or over a specific period of time in the past I sold my car about three months ago. When we lived in York, my father ran a small bakery.
- habitual actions or behaviour in the past Did you bite your nails when you were a child? When I was a teenager, my mum got really angry if I didn't tidy my bedroom.

Used to + infinitive can also be used to refer to past situations and habitual actions. Would + infinitive can be used to refer to past habitual actions, but not situations. Every summer we used to/would go to Scotland to visit my grandmother.

I used to (not would) have a parrot, but he escaped.

2 Past continuous

The past continuous can be used to refer to:

- situations or actions in progress at a particular moment
  - This time last year I was taking the Advanced exam.
- a past situation or action which was in progress when another action occurred

We were still having breakfast when Mark and Marian past actions or situations occurring at the same time

She was working hard to earn some extra money and he was spending it all on new gadgets. repeated past actions, which the speaker finds annoying She was always complaining about something.

3 Present perfect

The present perfect links past events and situations with the present.

- A The present perfect simple can be used:
  - to talk about recent past events which have some relevance to the present They can't afford to go on holiday -they've just bought a
  - to describe situations which started in the past and continue to the present

We've had these saucepans since we got married 43 years ago.

to talk about events which occurred at some time between the past and present. The exact time they occurred is either unknown or unimportant. I've already seen United play three times this season.

Grammar reference

- after the expression this/that/it is the first/second/third, etc.time...
- This is the fourth time I've seen United play this season. after the expression it's (two/three, etc) years/a long time
- since ... The past simple is also possible. It's years since I've had/I had bacon for breakfast.
- with another present perfect to describe two states or actions which have existed or occurred together.
   We've been burgled twice since we've lived here.
- B The present perfect continuous is used with verbs which describe actions (e.g. give, play, take), but not with verbs which describe states (e.g. be, know, like). It can be used to:
  - emphasize the duration of a situation or activity
     He's been working on his first novel for over ten years.
  - suggest that a situation or activity is temporary My kitchen's being redecorated so I've been eating at my mum's.
  - suggest that a situation or activity is incomplete I've been reading that book you lent me – I think I know how it's going to end.
  - focus on the repetition of a situation or activity. The number of times it is repeated can only be included with the simple, not the continuous form.
     Someone's been phoning you.
     She's phoned about six or seven times this morning.
- C Both simple and continuous forms of the present perfect can be used to talk about the present effects of a past event. I'm exhausted! I've been cleaning the house all morning. (an activity)

Sally can't drive for a while; she's broken her leg. (a single action)

4 Past perfect

- A The past perfect simple can be used:
  - to show that a past event or situation occurred before another past event or situation
     As soon as the film started, I realized I had seen it before.
  - to describe situations which started in the past and continued to a later point in the past They had known each other for several years before they got married.
  - after that/it was the first/second/third, etc time...
     We went to Switzerland last summer; it was only the second time we'd been abroad.
  - after it was (two/three, etc) years/a long time since ...
    It was a long time since she had last seen her old school friend.
  - after certain time linkers, e.g. after, before, by the time, as soon as, once, when, until It was dark by the time I had finished repairing the roof.

The past simple can be used if the order of events is clear: I had a relaxing bath after I got home from work last night, or if the second event occurred as a result of the first.

When the music started, everyone got up to dance.

Participle clauses can sometimes be used in place of clauses with when or after and the past perfect.

Having eaten his sandwich, he put his coat on and left. (= After he had eaten his sandwich, he put his coat on and left.)

For more information on participle clauses, see Unit 10 on page 222.

B The past perfect continuous can be used in similar ways to the present perfect continuous, but instead of linking past events and situations with the present, it links them with another point in the past. It is not used with stative verbs (e.g. be, know, like).

I'd been waiting for over an hour when she finally arrived. (duration)

She found out that her son had been using her credit card to buy computer games. (repetition) You only had to smell his breath to know he'd been smoking. (effects of a past event)

5 Unfulfilled past events

The following structures can be used to talk about events which were intended to take place, but which did not happen.

I was going to send you an email, but I had a few problems with my computer.

I was about to call the doctor, but then the pain suddenly disappeared.

She had been/was thinking of going to Iceland, but changed her mind and went to Norway, instead.

The meeting, which was to have taken place last weekend, was unexpectedly cancelled.

6 Expressing preferences about the past

The following structures can be used to express how we would like the past to have been different.

 would like/love/prefer to + perfect infinitive, or would have liked/loved/preferred to + infinitive or perfect infinitive

We would like to have stayed longer, but we had to catch the train.

She would have loved to tell/to have told him what she thought of him.

If the subject of would like, etc is not the same as the subject of the verb which follows, an appropriate noun or object pronoun is inserted before the infinitive.

She would have preferred him to say it to her face, rather than put it in a letter.

would rather/sooner + perfect infinitive
 We stayed in a hotel, but I'd sooner have slept in a tent.

If the subject of would rather/sooner is not the same as the subject of the verb which follows, the past perfect is used. Would you rather I hadn't said anything about it to Matt?

For information on using wish/if only and conditional sentences to describe imaginary situations in the past, see section A in Unit 3 below.

Unit 3

Hypothetical situations and conditionals

Past tenses can be used to talk about unlikely, imaginary or impossible situations in the present, past or future.

A Past situations

 wish/if only + past perfect can be used to express wishes, regrets and criticisms about the past
 I wish I hadn't eaten my dinner so quickly. I've got indigestion now.

If only you had listened to my advice. You wouldn't be in this mess, should + perfect infinitive can also be used to express regrets and criticisms about the past

 We should have brought an umbrella. We're going to get soaking wet now.

You shouldn't have spoken to him like that. I'm not surprised he's upset.

 Third conditional sentences (if + past perfect, would/ might/could + perfect infinitive) can be used to speculate about how things might have been different in the past

If you had been paying attention, you might have understood what I was saying.

(= You weren't paying attention, so you didn't understand.)

If it hadn't been for that traffic jam on the motorway, we would have got here on time.

(= Because of the traffic jam we arrived late.)

A more formal variation is to omit if and begin with Had: Had she known about his criminal past, she would never have employed him.

 Mixed conditional sentences can be used to speculate about how a different situation in the past might have had different results in the present If you hadn't stayed up to watch the film lest night, you wouldn't be so tired now.

or, alternatively, how changes to a present situation might have influenced the past

If I weren't so broke at the moment, I could have bought you something decent for your birthday

The past simple is used in this last sentence to describe an unreal, or imaginary, situation in the present. The past simple can also be used in conditional sentences to describe real situations in the past:

If I arrived late at the office, my hoss used to get really angry. (If - Whenever)

For information on would like/love/prefer and would rather/ somer; see section 6 in Unit 2 on page 216.

B Present and future situations: conditionals

1 Zero conditional: # + present simple, present simple

 We use the zero conditional to talk about situations which are always true
 If I eat too much spicy food, I start to feel ill.

 First conditional: if + present simple, will/going to/may/ might/could + infinitive

 We use the first conditional to talk about possible future situations and their probable results

If you don't water that plant soon, it'll die.

- If * should/happen to/should happen to makes the event seem more unlikely or more of a chance possibility
   If I happen to see Mr Dee there, I'll ask him for you.
   If you should happen to miss the train, I could drive you there myself.
- A more formal variation is to begin with Should Should you wish to change your holiday arrangements, we will do all we can to help.
- 3 Second conditional: ff + past simple, would/might/could + infinitive
  - We use the second conditional to talk about imaginary, unlikely or impossible situations in the present and future

If I had an extra pair of hands, then I could help you! I might work harder if they paid me more. If it weren't for my savings, I wouldn't be able to survive. (= Thanks to my savings I can survive.)

 if + were to + infinitive makes the event seem more unlikely

If you were to walk in that direction for another thousand miles, you'd eventually arrive in Warsaw.

 A more for mil variation is to begin with Were Were they to break the contract, we would, of course, take level action.

 Suppose/Supposing/Imagine can be used instead of if, particularly in speech Supposing you ran out of money, what would you do?
 Imagine you lost your job. Do you think you'd be able to find another?

4 if can sometimes be followed by will, would or going to, for example when making polite requests or describing the result of a course of action.

If you would take a seat for a moment, I'll tell Mr Graydon vou're here.

If it is going to be more profitable for the company, then I think we should do it.

Unit 4

Punctuation

1 Commas

- Commas are normally used after subordinate clauses when these come first in a sentence.
   If I have any problems, I'll let you know.
   They are not normally used when the subordinate clause follows the main clause.
   We'll phone you as soon as we get there.
- Commas are used after linking adverbials at the beginning of a sentence (see Unit 12).
   Meanwhile, darkness began to fall.
   For this reason, I have decided to resign.
   They are also used before adverbials if these are inserted in the sentence.

The workers, however, have refused to accept the offer.
 Commas are used to separate items in a list or series.
 They are not normally used between the last two items.
 She got up, had a shower, got dressed and went out.

 Commas are used with non-identifying relative clauses but not with identifying relative clauses (see Unit 5).
 My father, who is a lawyer, edvised me on the legal matters.

The man who bought our house is a lawyer.

 Commas are used to separate direct speech from the reporting verb.
 Empry your bag, 'he said. She replied, 'It's already empty.'
 They are not used before that, if, where, etc. in reported speech.

She replied that it was already emply.

2 Apostrophes

Apostrophes are used:

- to indicate where letters have been omitted from contracted forms
   I don't think it's fair.
- to indicate possession the boss's office—my parents' house the children's books

Apostrophes are not used with possessive pronouns or adjectives.

Yours is here. Its tail is white.

3 Semicolons

Semicolons can be used:

- in place of full stops where two sentences are closely related in meaning
   Some storks fly south in winter; others stay put, using local rubbish dumes as their food source.
- to separate items in a list, particularly long or grammatically complex ones
   There were several reasons why Jeremy chose not to go abroad on holiday, he had an acute fear of flying (even though he had never flown before); long periods of exposure to the sun brought him out in a rash; he was suspicious of any food which was not 'good home cooking'; ...

4 Colons

Colons can be used:

before explanations
We moved to a different area: the noise from the traffic was becoming unbearable.

to introduce a list
 The park boasts several different species of trees: oak, ash, elm, beech, alder and a wide variety of conifers.

5 Dushes

Dashes are used in informal writing:

in place of a colon
 We've bought a new car – the old one kept breaking down.

 to create a pause in order to emphasize what follows I took my driving test yesterday – and I passed!

Grammar reference

Gerunds and infinitives

A The infinitive with to is used:

to express purpose
 I went out to get some fresh air.

after some adjectives
 It's not easy to find work these days.

after the verb to be, to give orders or to express an arrangement
You're to stay here until I get back.
The President is to visit Poland next month.

 after would hate/like/love/prefer, with or without an object

Would you like me to do it now?

after the following verbs agree, appear, arrange, ask, attempt, choose, decide, demand, deserve, expect, help, hesitate, hope, learn, manage, offer, prepare, pretend, refuse, seem, threaten

If you need any help, don't hesitate to contact me.

 after the following verbs + object advise, allow, ask, challenge, enable, encourage, expect, force, get, help, intend, invite, order, persuade, recommend, remind, teach, tell, urge, warn

My family encouraged me to go to university.

If advise and recommend are used without an object, the gerund is used.

I recommended her to apply to King's College. I recommended applying to King's College.

after the following nouns ability, attempt, capacity, chance, decision, desire, determination, effort, failure, intention, need, opportunity, permission, plan, proposal, refusal, right, tendency, way, willineness

It was the director's refusal to accept his proposals that led to his decision to resign.

B The hare infinitive (without to) is used:

after modal verbs

I shouldn't eat this really, but I can't resist it.

after the following verbs
 had better, help, let, make, would rather/sooner

We'd better go home now – it's very late. Can you help me tidy up, please?

In the passive, make is followed by the infinitive with to. We were made to do all the dirty jobs.

C The gerund is used:

as the subject, object or complement of a clause or sentence Playing golf helps me relax, but I find watching it on after prepositions television rather boring.

We thought about going to France this year.

 after the following expressions have difficulty/problems, there's no/little point, it's no gooduse, it's (not) worth

It's no use asking him - he won't know the answer.

after the following verbs

admit, adore, advise, anticipate, appreciate, avoid, can't help, can't stand, consider, delay, deny detest, dislike, dread, anjoy, feel like, give up, imagine, involve, keep, (dov't) mind, miss, postpone, practise, prevent, propose, put off, recommend, resear, resist, risk, suggest i resent having to do all the housework myself.

 after the following verbs + the preposition to adaptiadjust to, admit to, confess to, get round to, get used to, book forward to, object to

She confessed to heing surprised by her success.

Where the subjects of the main verb and the gerund are different, an object (pronoun) or possessive adjective is used.

I couldn't imagine him eating something like this. We appreciate your coming to tell us so quickly.

D The following verbs can be followed by the gerund or the infinitive with to with no change in meaning: begin, can't bear, continue, hate, intend, like, love, prefer, start

She suddenly started singing/to sing.

The infinitive is common for specific situations. Compare the following sentences: I hate to say this, but your breath smells.

I hate getting up early every morning.

E The following verbs can be followed by the gerund or the infinitive with to, but with a change in meaning: forget, mean, regret, remember, stop, try

The infinitive is used with remember, forget, regret and stop when the act of remembering, etc comes first. The gerund is used when it comes second. I must remember to post this letter later. I distinctly remember posting the later yesterday. Her car broke down and no one stopped to help her. I've stopped eating chocolate.

When regret is followed by the infinitive with to, it is normally used with verbs such as vay, tell and inform. This use is formal.

We regret to inform you that your application has been unsuccessful.

 by + infinitive with to means attempt, by + gerund means experiment with.

Please be quiet – I'm trying to sleep. If you can't sleep, try using earplugs.

 mean + infinitive with to means intend, mean - gerund means involve.

I've been meaning to write to you for ages. Changing jobs also meant changing house.

Unit 5

Reference

1 This, that, these and those can be used to refer back to previously stated people, things, events or ideas. This and these are more common than that and those.

This and that can be used:

before nouns or on their own
 ... and he left school at 16. This (decision) did not please his parents.
 He hated school. That's why he left at 16.

These and those are more commonly used before nouns.

... the mobile phone and the computer. These two inventions have revolutionized communications ... auring the 1930s. In those days, of course, people didn't have computers.
 You've got so many toys. Let's get rid of those that you don't play with anymore.

2 A number of other words can be used to substitute and avoid repetition of previously used words and phrases.

do/does/did to replace a verb

Paul didn't want to go, but I did. (= I wanted to go.)

do so can also be used to replace a verb + object

He taid her to lock the door, but she had already done so.

sc/nor/neither - auxiliary verb + subject
 She likes dogs and so do I. (= I like dogs, too.)
 I've never been to Paris and nor/neither has he. (- He hasn't been to Paris either.)

 soinot to replace a that-clause after expect, hope, seem, suppose, think

'Is he coming?' I think so." (= I think that he's coming.)
'Do you think it'll rain?' 'I hope not." (= I hope that it won't rain.)

Note that I don't think so is more common than I think not.

if not/so to replace whole clauses
 Are you free on Friday? If so, do you fancy going to the cinema? If not, how about next week?

one/ones to replace countable nouns
 What sort of ice cream would you like? A plain one or one with chocolate sauce on?
 Those red apples are much tastier than these green ones.

Ellipsis

Ellipsis involves omitting words to avoid repetition.

- 1 It is common to omit words after and and but. I live and (I) work in Madrid. John was impressed, but I wasn't (impressed). We play tennis on Saturdays and (we) sometimes (play) on Sundays, too.
- The main verb can be omitted after an auxiliary verb. I'd do it myself if I could. (- if I could do it myself) She said she would phone, but she hasn't. He said he saw her there, but he can't have.

Adverbs can be placed before the auxiliary. 'Can you turn the heating on?' I already have.'

be cannot be omitted after a modal verb.
'Is the shop open yet?' It might be.'

been can be omitted in a perfect passive, except after a modal verb.

'Has she been promoted?' 'Yes, she has.' He wasn't sent to prison, but he should have been,

3 Instead of repeating a full infinitive expression we can simply use to. I don't eat much cheese now, but I used to.

Relative clauses

A Defining relative clauses

These contain essential information which identifies the person or thing being talked about, Who and which can be replaced by that, and the relative pronoun can be omitted if it is the object of the verb in the relative clause. No commas are required at the beginning or end of the relative clause.

The woman wholthat used to babysit for us has just got married.

It's not the kind of novel which/that appeals to me.
I know a boy whose father is a professional diver.
Just a quick note to thank you for the flowers (which/that) you sent me.

When and why can also be omitted in defining relative clauses.

I'll never forget the day (when) Geoff resigned. The reason (why) he left is still unclear.

Where cannot be omitted. Compare the following: That's the shop where we bought our bed. That's the shop (which/that) we bought our bed in.

In more formal English, prepositions can be placed before the relative pronouns whom and which (but not that). They returned to the shop in which the bed had been purchased.

B Non-defining relative clauses

These contain non-essential information: we can identify which person or thing is being talked about without the information in the relative clause. That cannot be used and the relative pronoun cannot be omitted. Commas are required at the beginning and the end of the relative clause (except when the end of the relative clause is also the end of the sentence).

Our former babysitter, who got married last year, has just had her first child.

His first novel, which was largely autobiographical, became an overnight success.

Alan Smith, whose father is a professional diver, is the only boy in our class who can't swim.

Which is used in non-defining relative clauses to refer to a whole clause.

He works 12 hours a day, which must be very tiring,

What is not used to refer to a whole clause. It means 'the thing that'.

Let me know what you decide to do.

What I need right now is a cup of tea. (see Unit 9)

Unit 6 Passives

A Form

The passive is formed with the appropriate tense or form of the verb to  $b\epsilon$  and the past participle of the main verb:

We should have been told earlier.

A full investigation is currently being carried out.

The passive cannot be used with intransitive verbs. The rabbit was disappeared by the magician. X

B Use

The passive is used to focus attention on the action or the person or thing affected by the action, rather than on the agent, the person or thing that performs the action.

Smith was failed for three years.

If the agent is mentioned, the preposition by is used:

The President was criticized by members of his own party.

The choice between active and passive is often influenced by context. 'Given' or previously mentioned information usually comes at the beginning of a clause or sentence and new information towards the end. In the following example, The letter is 'given' information: it is reterred to in the previous sentence (Albert Einstein wrote to President Frenklin Rooseveli). Since it is not the agent of the verb 'compose', the passive form is necessarily used.

In 1939 Albert Einstein wrote to President Franklin Roosevelt, urging the United States to develop an atomic bomb. The letter was composed by the Hungarian-born physicist and biophysicist Leo Szilard, a former colleague of Einstein, who felt it would have more influence if it were signed by his eminent friend.

There is also a tendency to place long phrases towards the end of the clause. If, as in the above example, the agent is a long phrase (the Hungarian-born physicist, etc) this appears at the end of the clause and the passive form is necessarily used. Also:

The meeting was attended by representatives of the five permanent members of the UN Security Council.

C Not mentioning the agent

The agent is not usually mentioned in passive constructions:

- if the agent is unknown or unimportant Lunch will be served from one o'clock in the canteen.
- if it is obvious who the agent is
   The musician was arrested at his home on Friday.
- if the agent is 'people in general'
   The passive is not used with intransitive verbs.
- to avoid the use of 'you' in official notices Unsold tickets must be returned by 16th August.

Grammar reference

D Further passive constructions

1 The infinitive or perfect infinitive with to can be used with certain verbs to give generalized opinions or facts. Verbs used in this way include: allege, believe, consider, estimate, expect, know, report, say, think, understand, as well as be rumoured and be reputed.

She is expected to make a statement later today. He is rumoured to have sold it for a six-figure sum. A million people were estimated to have taken part in the demonstration.

2 have + object + past participle can be used to show that the subject arranges for the action to be done by someone else. Get is a more informal alternative to have. Compare: I'm going to develop the photos myself. I'm going to havelget the photos developed at the shop on the corner.

The same structure can be used for events which are outside the speaker's control.

I had my passport stolen on holiday.

3 get can also be used as an informal alternative to be in passive sentences.
We get knocked out of the Cup in the first round.

It is commonly used with the following past participles: burnt, caught, dressed, hart, involved, left, lost, stuck

She got caught shoplifting. Do as I say and no one will get hurt.

Unit 7 Reported speech

A Changes

Some words and features of grammar used in direct speech may have to be changed in reported speech.

1 Tense changes

 Present tenses change to past; present perfect and past tenses change to past perfect.
 Ten having a great time, 'said Paul.

Tm having a great time,' said Paul. Paul said he was having a great time.

Tva never ridden a horse,' said Clare. Clare said she had never ridden a horse.

'We were trying to phone you,' she said. She said they had been trying to phone us.

 The modal verbs will, must, may and can change to would, had to, might and could.
 Would, might, could, should and ought to do not change, nor does must when it is used for deductions.

It must be done by romorrow, she said. She told me it had to be done by the following day.

'It must be raining,' she said. She said it must be raining.

2 Other changes

Pronouns and certain words indicating time and place may have to change when we use reported speech.

I saw you here yesterday, 'said Alan.

Alan said he had seen me there the day before.

3 Tense changes are not necessary:

 if the statement being reported is still true Tintend to retire next year, he said. He told me he intends to retire next year.

 if the reporting verb is in the present or present perfect We are gaing to get married.'
 They have announced that they are going to get married.

I never tell hes.' She says she never tells lies. 4 When questions are reported:

auxiliary verbs do, does and did are not used

. the word order is the same as for statements

yes/no questions are reported with if or whether question marks are not used

Where's Paul?' He asked where Paul is/was. Did you enjoy it?' She asked if I (had) enjoyed it.

B Verb patterns

Several different verb patterns can be used in reported speech. Some reporting verbs can be used with more than one verb pattern. For example:

He asked to leave. He asked (hem to leave. He asked that they should leave. (Formal)

1 verb + that clause e.g. add, admit, announce, assure, claim, complain, concede, conclude, confirm, emphasize, estimate, explain, mention, point out, predict, reassure, remark, remind, repeat, say, state, stress, tell, warn Note that assure, reassure, remind and tell are followed by an object.

Critics predicted that the film would be a success.

My daughter reminded me that I had promised to take her to the zoo on her birthday.

2 verb + (that) sh (should) do sth/sth (should) happen e.g. advise, agree, ask, demand, insist, propose, recommend, request, suggest

They demanded that he should resign. We suggested he apply for the job.

3 verb + infinitive with to e.g. agree, ask, claim, demand, offer, promise, refuse, threaten

He claimed to be an expert on ghosts.

She urged him not to get involved.

4 verb + object - infinitive with to e.g. advise, ask, beg, convince, encourage, forbid, instruct, invite, order, persuade, recommend, remind, tell, urge, warn

5 verb – gerund e.g. admit, advise, deny, recommend, regret, suggest

He denied taking/having taken the money.

6 verb - preposition + gerund e.g. advise, argue, protest, warn against apologize, blame, forgive, maise, tell off, thank for discourage, dissuade from accuse, speak of congratulate, insist on admit, confess, consent, object to

She admitted to feeling rather nervous. He told me off for singing! I insisted on his/him wearing a suit.

7 Some reporting verbs can be used in the passive after it. This structure can be used if the speaker does not wish to take responsibility for a statement or is reporting the views of others. Verbs include: announce, believe, claim, confirm, estimate, rumour, suggest and think.
It is thought that the rear here left the country.

It is thought that she may have left the country. It has been suggested that the minister took bribes.

Unit 8

Determiners and pronouns

A Determiners

The following words are determiners: they come before nouns and can be used to indicate which thing(s) you are referring to, or to talk about quantities and amounts. all, another, any, both, each, either, enough, every, (a) few, fewer, less, a lot of, (a) little, many, more, most, much, neither, no, one, other, several, some, this, that, these, those

2 Determiners can be used:

 before singular countable nouns e.g. another, any, each, either, every, neither, no, one, same, this, that

Can I have another sandwich, please?

Either and neither are used to talk about two things, Each is used to talk about two or more things; every is only used to talk about more than two. All four determiners are followed: by a singular verb.

It's an exciting final, which neither player deserves to lose.

Each/Every sone sounds the same.

before plural nouns e.g. all, any, both, enough, (a) few fewer, a lot of, many, more, most, no, other, several, some, these, those

We haven't got enough eggs to make an omelette.

Few means 'not many' or 'not as many as desired or expected'. Very can be used before few to emphasize it. There are very few apples left. We need to buy some.

A few means 'some' or 'more than expected'. We've still yot a few eggs – enough to make an omelette.

Quite can be used with a few to mean a fairly large number. Wa've got quite a few kinsis - we need to eat them before they go rutten.

before uncountable nouns e.g. ali, any, enough, less, (a) little, a lot of, more, most, much, no, some, this, that He's nearly baid - he's got very little hair left.

Some can be used to mean 'approximately' or 'a large amount's

I was waiting for some two hours - that's quite some time.

3 Sometimes more than one determiner can be used before every fewllive days every other week another few drinks no other town/books muny more/other ways these few examples

B Pronouns

Most of the determiners above can also be used as pronouns. Pronouns are used instead of nouns. Every, no and other cannot be used as pronouns: each is used instead of every, none instead of no, and others instead of other. A lot of becomes a lot as a pronoun.

Bad reviews are better than no reviews. (Determiner) Bad reviews are better than none. (Pronoun)

Pronouns can be used:

on their own 'Would you like sugar on it?' 'Just a little,' 'Do you prefer tea or coffee?' 'I don't like either.'

One another and each other are used as objects of verbs. Bob and Alice loved one another/each other. (Bob loved Alice and Alice loved Bob.)

with of + pronoun They've got two boys - both of them are blond.

with of + the, this, that, these, those, my, your, etc - noun By some of my wine. Neither of these books is mine.

of is optional with all and both before a noun All (of) my clothes/Both (of) my socks are wer.

 after a determiner There are no others. I've got a few more. Look at this one, Try each one. Would you like any more?

All and both can also be used

- after a noun or pronoun My parents both work at home. Jazz, pop, rock ... I listen to them all
- after a modal or auxiliary verb We've all/both seen that film.

Modal verbs 2: will, shall and would

1 Will and would can be used to express:

· present and past habits. This use is not possible with stative verbs (e.g. be, know, like). She will often fall asleep in front of the television. He would always read us a story at bedtime.

typical annoying behaviour. In speech, will and would are stressed.

He will keep interrupting when I'm talking. I would get a cold now, just as the holiday is starting!

willingness to do something. This includes requests. If you'll/would follow me, Ms Ray will see you now. Will/Would you oven the door a little, please? I wish he would try a bit harden refusal to do something in the present and the past. Muminy! Eva won't let me play with her dolls!

I asked him, but he wouldn't tell me.

2 Will can also be used to express assumptions about the present. There's someone at the door.' That'll be Lydia.'

3 Shall can be used:

to make a request for advice or instructions I'm very worried about Peter. What shall we do? What time shall we meet?

to make an offer or a suggestion Shall I help you carry that? Shall we go?

Talking about the future

- 1 will and going to can be used to make predictions. I don't think I'll bell'm going to be well enough to go to work tomarrow.
- 2 going to also describes intentions or plans. I'm going to work really hard this year.
- The present continuous describes fixed arrangements. I'm having lunch with Brian tomorrow.
- Modal verbs express different degrees of uncertainty about the future.

Dave should be here soon. (Probability) We might have a party next week. (Possibility) may/might/could well + infinitive without to expresses probability.

We might well be moving in the next few weeks.

5 Verbs of thinking, such as believe, doubt, expect and think, are followed by will when referring to the future. Hope can also be followed by a present tense.

I expect I'll lose again - I always do.

I hope they (will) keep in touch with us.

6 be (un)likely to + infinitive expresses probability. The situation is likely to get worse.

be bound to + infinitive expresses certainty.

It's a ridiculous plan and it's bound to fail 8 he (inst) about to + infinitive/he on the point of - gerund can be used to talk about the immediate future. I'll call you back - I'm just about to go into a meeting.

9 he due to + infinitive refers to scheduled times. The new supermarket is due to open in April.

10 The present simple also refers to scheduled times.

Hurry up! The hus leaves in ten minutes. 11 be +to + infinitive can be used to talk about arrangements. Next year's tournament is to be held in Frankfuri. (See also section A of Gerunds and infinitives in Unit 4 on page 218.)

Grammar reference

12 The future continuous is used.

 to talk about actions or events which will be in progress at a certain time in the future.

Don't call after night - I'll be watching the match then.

- to talk about a future action that will happen because it is regular or decided. It can be used to ask about someone's plans politely.
   I'll be seeing Joe later I'll give this to him then.
   Will you be coming out with us romorrow night?
- 13 The future perfect is used to talk about actions and events which will be completed by, or which continue until, a certain time in the future.
  I think we'll have finished the job by Friday.
  Next month I'll have been working here for ten years.

Unit 9

Creating emphasis

If we want to give particular importance to a person, a thing or a clause in a sentence, we can use these structures: It is/was ... that ... or What ... is/was ...

It was Norman's incredible sense of humour that first arraced the to him.

What I find strange is (the fact) that he never talks about his tather.

In each case, the underlined part of the sentence is being emphasized.

1 tt is was ... that ... can be used:

 with (only) when, while or not until to emphasize a (period of) time

It was while he was in Spain that Lennon wrote Strawberry Fields Forever.

It wasn't until he took off his hat that I recognized him.

with because to emphasize reasons
 Perhaps it's because I'm a chef that people never inviteme to their disner parties.

w emphasize prepositional phrases
 It was on the radio that I first heard the news.

 to emphasize a thing or a person 'who' can be used in place of 'that' if we are referring to a person.

It was Gary who broke the chair. It's his left arm that's broken, not his right one.

Model verbs can be used instead of is and was.

It can't be my mobile phone that's ringing—it's switched off.

It might have been the fish that made me feel ill.

2 What ... is/was ... can be used to emphastze:

• a noun

What I most wanted to see in The Louvre was the Mona Lisa.

an action or series of actions

What you do then is (to) add the flour and stir it in thoroughly.

What happened was (that) I left my wallet in the café and had to go back.

All can be used instead of What to mean 'the only thing that'.
All he (ever) did during the school holiday was (to) play on his computer.

All I really want is a little house in the countryside.

Unit 10

Participle clauses

Participle clauses are clauses which begin with a present or past participle. They help to express ideas concisely, and addvariety to written English.

Participle clauses can be used:
 instead of relative clauses.

I recognize that man standing over there. (= who is standing)

Three of the people injured in the crash are still in hospital. (- who were injured)

instead of certain conjunctions

because/so

Not wishing to affend say host. I are everything on my plate.

askahile

Looking out of the window last night, I saw a shooting ster.

when/once/afte

Having worked out how much you can afford to pay for your computer, you need to decide on the model.

una He feli off the ladder, breaking a leg and three ribs.

it

Cooked in their skins, potatoes retain most of their nutrients.
• after the objects of the following verbs: see, hear, watch, notice, feel and find

Police found him lying unconscious on the kitchen floor. I could hear something moving in the bushes.

2 Note that:

 Stative verbs (e.g. be, warn, know) are not normally used in continuous tenses, but the -ing form can be used in participle clauses.

I am heing a vary sky parson, so I never enjoy going to parties. X

Being a very sky person, I never enjoy going to parties. V

 The subject of a participle clause is usually the same as the subject of the main clause.

Working as a waitress, I have all my meals in the restaurant.

However, it is possible to have a participle clause with a different subject. Instead of:

Having been damaged by vandals, Helen had to welk rather than go on her bicycle. X

we can say:

Her bicycle having been damaged by vandals, Helen had to walk. 🗸 with is sometimes used to introduce a different subject.

 With both my parents working all day, I have to cook my own lunch.

Unit 11

Inversion

Certain adverbs and adverbial phrases with a negative or restrictive meaning can be placed at the beginning of a sentence for emphasis. In this case, the position of the subject and verb is reversed, as in question forms. This occurs mainly in written English or more formal speech.

Where the main verb is used with an auxiliary verb, the position of the subject and auxiliary verb is reversed. I will never lend money to Richard again. (Normal word order)

Never again will I lend money to Richard. (Inversion)

Where no auxiliary verb is present, either do, does or did is inserted.

Steve hardly ever turned up on time for his lectures.

Hardly ever did Steve turn up on time for his lectures.

2 Inversion is used:

after certain phrases with not
 Not since I was little have I enjoyed myself so much.
 Not until we got to my parents' house did we realize we'd left all the Christmas presents at home.
 Not only did he leave firty footprints all over our carpet, but he also sat on my glasses.

- after certain phreses with only
   Only when I tell you can you put your books away.
   Only then was I made aware of the potential dangers.
   Further examples: only recently, only later, only in the last few weeks, only at the end of the lesson
- after certain phrases with no
   On no account must you speak to other candidates.

Modal verbs 3: must, need, should and ought to

A Must

1 must and have to

must + infinitive is used to give orders or strong advice, or to tell oneself what is necessary. The authority comes from the speaker.

All questions must be answered.

You really must see Russell Crowe's new film. I must remember to get some bread.

Although not a modal verb, have to + infinitive is also used to talk about obligations. The authority comes from someone other than the speaker.

We have to wear a swimming cap in the indoor pool.

2 mustn't and don't have to mustn't expresses prohibition; don't have to expresses lack of obligation or necessity.

You mustn't touch this, durling – it's very hot.

You don't have to come if you don't want to.

3 must have done and had to do

must have + past participle is used to speculate about past situations; had to + infinitive expresses past obligation or necessity.

Seen's late - he must have got stack in a traffic jam.

The bus broke down so I had to walk.

B Should/Ought to

- 1 should and ought to + infinitive are used to give advice or express opinions about what is right and wrong, should have and ought to have + past participle can be used to criticize past actions, express regret or talk about things which were supposed to happen but didn't. You shouldn't play with matches it's dangerous. You really shouldn't have shouled at him like that. We ought to have asked fill if she wanted to come. Where's Bob? He should have been here ages ago.
- 2 should and ought can also be used to talk about probability. If you leave now, you should belought to be there by midday.

C Need

1 need and need to need + infinitive is not used in ordinary statements and is very rare in questions; need to + infinitive is much more common for expressing necessity.

I need to get some new shoes. (not: I need get ... *)

What do we need to take with us?

My brother in-law and his family stayed with us at Christmas. Need I say more?

Grammar reference

2 needn't and don't need to

Usually, there is no difference in meaning between usadn't it infinitive and don't need to + infinitive; they both indicate a lack of obligation to do something.

However, weedn't usually refers to immediate necessity and tends to be used to give permission not to do something; the authority comes from the speaker. You needn't come tomorrow if you don't want to.

don't need to tends to indicate general necessity; the authority does not come from the speaker, don't have to can be used in the same way.

You don't need toldon't have to spend a fortune to keep fit.

3 needn't have done and didn't need to do needn't have + past participle is used to talk about an action which was performed but which was unnecessary. You needn't have bought those batteries - we've got plenty in the drower didn't need to + infinitive is used to talk about an action which was unnecessary. It usually indicates that the subject did not perform the action.

I didn't need to spend very long on my homework last night - it was quite easy.

Extract One

M = Man W = Woman

- M: You know, when we heard we'd been nominated for an award - and we knew who the other nominces were - well, just for a brief moment, I guess we got a kick out of it. I mean, the other hands are guys we really respect, but we've always used our music to attack capitalism. It would be incredibly hypocritical to go to a ccremony sponsored by the corporate
- W: Yeah, and we knew who had voted for us. We've been together for four years, and the people who liked our music from the start, the ones who've been coming to the gigs, they know what our principles are. And they wouldn't go in for that kind of thing. But you know, you get your first number one single and the mainstream music listeners think you're a new band and they go out and vote for you. For a moment in time your song's getting the biggest number of hits - and then the public move on.

Extract Two

OM = Older man YM = Younger man

OM: Well - obviously - I was gutted that the home team didn't come out on top, but it wasn't altogether a surprise. Three of the players were making their debut, and you can tell they were a bit overawed by the occasion, and it impacted on the overall team performance. You can't put the blame on the coach - giving the novices a chance was a management decision, and it backfired. That's all I've got to say on that game, but I have to say that I do have a problem with the way that a couple of the players only seem interested in offering their skills to the highest bidder. They've got no regard for the fans, apparently.

YM: That's what it looks like, certainly on the outside. It's a shame because those guys have inspired a generation. You have to wonder whether the newspapers are doing what they usually do and stirring up a bit of controversy - but if it's true the players are quitting and going overseas just for the big dollars, that's very disappointing.

Extract Three

- W: 40-hour Famine is about students not eating food for 40 hours. The idea is to promote a bit more awareness of what it's like for people who are starving through no fault of their own - say through crop failure or drought. Many students are too young to volunteer to go overseas and help out directly and they haven't got the cash to make monthly donations, but taking part in this is something they can do. And, of course, the sponsorship they get goes to excellent charities. This is my first year, but it's Tom's second, isn't it, Tom?
- W: How did you do last year?
- M: I only made it to 35, actually. I felt really dizzy and had to give up. But no one made me feel like I'd let them down; they were just concerned. I thought 'Oh, well, I'll make sure I manage it next time.' And look ... in another four hours I will have reached that goal.

Unit 2 (Page 18)

Part 2: Sentence completion

Hi, I'm Simon, and last week I got to spend a whole day at the National Museum where I was shown around by one of the curators. I'd only been there as a visitor before, so it was interesting to find out what goes on. behind the scenes. The collections at the museum are quite diverse there's a whole floor devoted to the natural environment, for example, and, of course, a large section for Pacific cultures. Melanie, the curator, told me she'd done a degree in anthropology, but when she applied to the museum, she decided to focus on social history, and she's been working in that area ever since. I thought it would be worth asking what sort of educational background most of the other curators had, and what sort of work experience you needed if you wanted a position there, but apparently it's your communication skills that really count. They're essential for all

Then I asked Melanie to explain what kind of things she's personally responsible for. She said that whenever the museum acquired a new object, the first stage of the process was identification. That might involve, for example, finding out where and when something was made, that sort of thing. She would do that by herself, but she'd work with other specialists if the object was in any way damaged, and needed restoration of some kind. Then, we went on to talk about one aspect of being a curator that I know I'd be hopeless at if I had to do it - and that's when they have to write and maintain records. You obviously have to be meticulous about detail.

Melanie also spends some of her time preparing for conferences, and liaising with other curators or researchers working in the same field. She also has to reply to the correspondence and enquiries she gets from the public, and this can take up quite a bit of time.

I was also curious to know what Melanie liked most in the collection, and she said it was a series of letters sent by a soldier to his wife back home. I had a look and they were certainly very moving. What really caught my eye, though, and you can see them all along the walls, were a lot of advertisements from the 20th century. They really give you an insight into people's lifestyle at the time. Well worth a look if you go to the museum.

Melanie told me that many exhibits have been gifted, so, for example, most of the paintings have been donated not bought. Apparently, it's not just wealthy benefactors, but ordinary people who want to offer a family heirloom, say. So recently, for instance, a woman brought in an antique clock in perfect working order. Melanie has to say no to photo alhums, however, because it's so hardto preserve them.

I'm going to finish by mentioning the biggest problem the museum has - and it's not something you'd automatically think of. When it comes to preserving the physical exhibits, the curators are confident that they've got that under control. but they're not so good at preserving digital data, and they're investigating new storage formats to ensure it's preserved for posterity.

Well, I hope I have given you a better idea of what it's like to work at the I'd given up just about everything the job, the house, the ear - and gone to Spain to be with my husband. Then six months later it was all over. Both of us believed we'd rushed into marriage too soon and there was little that made us compatible as spouses. At the same time, we felt the friendship that had drawn us together in the first place was just too valuable to throw away and the only way to save it was by splitting up. The thing is, I remember hugging Alfonso at the airport, boarding the flight to Manchester and waiting to feel some kind of relief. It dich't come. By the time we landed, I had this awful sense that we'd rushed just as fast into a divorce. A year has passed and I still can't help wishing we'd put a bit more effort into staying together.

Speaker 2

I was a no-hoper at school, see. No one had heard of dyslexia in those days, so my teachers just classed me as an 'idiot'. I might have behaved myself later if I'd been given a bit more attention then, but I was told time and time again that I was going to be a failure. It surprised no one, including myself, that I ended up in prison, but all that time on my hands gave me the chance to think. I realized Id turned out just how they said and I wanted to prove it could be different. I did a law degree while I was inside, and it was tough, I tell you, but since I got out, I've never looked back. I'm about to become a partner in a law lirm and that's an achievement that gives me immense satisfaction.

Speaker 3

I'd always wanted to do voluntary work, ever since I qualified as a nurse. Marriage and children always got in the way of my plans, though, but now that the kids were older, there didn't seem any reason to put it off, even though I was coming up to my 50th birthday. And once I'd got their backing, there was no stopping me, really. Of course, I missed them all when I was there, but I just threw myself into my work. I had. to, really. It was a very isolated rural area - there was no running water, no medicines and so much poverty. But I can't tell you how much I appreciate the fact that I was given the chance to go - it was a real eye-opener and I learnt so much about their culture and about myself for that I'll always be thankful.

I'd worked my way up to supervisor and got just about as far as I could go in the company. It was a responsible position and gave us a certain amount of security and, I suppose, that's why I stuck it for so long. Inevitably, though, it got to the point where the routine just got too much. I wasn't developing professionally and nothing about the job pushed me to better myself. So when Sue suggested taking over a café franchise, I jumped at the chance. Neither of us had a background in eatering, but we refused to be daunted. We had to learn all aspects of the business in a very short time, but I found it all very thrilling. and still do. Even now I wake up every day really looking forward to going in to work - being in a new environment and dealing with the fast pace.

I'd been biting my nails since I was a three-year-old, apparently. It had never really bothered me before, despite my parents' constant moaning. They made me put this liquid on them called 'No-bite', Tasted horrible, it did - until I got used to it, that was. When I started work, though, I began noticing the looks of mild horror on the customers' faces. Every time I was wrapping up a present. or was just resting my hands on the counter, I could sense them staring and it made me incredibly self-conscious. So I had these plastic tips put on and that gave my nails the chance to grow. No one notices them anymore so the problem is essentially solved, but it has nothing to do with my willpower. It's actually humiliating for a 23-year-old to be wearing plastic tips. It's a secret I would hate my boyfriead to find out.

- M: The last book I wrote was something my publisher asked me to writeabout the River Thames, and its history and it wasn't a passion of mine, that sort of thing, and to this day I'm not entirely sure why the publisher approached sie, but I could imagine how other people might be interested, so I signed up. And once I'd got into it. I found the whole thing quite intriguing. I'd rather not have had to limit our investigation just to the inner city, but there's only so much you can pack into 400 pages. Now it's finished, I have to say I rather miss working on it. Do you enjoy the research side of things?
- W: Not so much, but now we have the Internet, of course.
- M: Indeed, but can you trust what you read?
- W: The way I see it, the Internet's given us access to limitless knowledge. If only we'd had it when I was first starting out - it would have saved me countless trips to the library and a lot of time and effort. Sure you have to check and cross reference things, but I can live with that.

- M: I don't know if you've heard, but I'm off to Greece once the term finishes. I'm joining up with this team of archaeologists - they need people to do the physical stuff – the digging. I mean. It won't be paid, but it'll give me some real experience in the field - even if it's not strictly relevant to the courses I'm taking next year - and it'll make a change from the tedious kind of jobs I normally and up doing during the holidays.
- W: Well, I imagine you'll really get a lot out of it. After I finished my first degree - and we're talking, er, at least ten years ago now, I got offered a position with a really prestigious firm of architects - and I felt I couldn't say no, especially because we were all still waiting for the examresults to come out. And it was good there, but I still wish I'd given myself the chance to consider something else. Well, that's why I've come back to university, I suppose.

- EM: If you only hang out with other game designers, if gaming is your entire world, that's actually going to work against your development. The people on top in this profession are the ones with, I'd call it, an 'insatiable curiosity' for, say, history, science, music - that kind of thing. Anyway, when I'm starting out on a new game. I'll work out what the goal is. That's my priority. So, for example, for my last game it was the idea that Man is a part of Nature, not separate, and I'll go from there. The people and the overall image come. later down the line.
- AM: I probably have a similar approach and I agree that whatever you're designing - be it a first-person shooter, action-adventure, roleplaying, whatever ... if you want to become one of the great game. designers, you need a great deal of general knowledge and an enquiring mind. A good grasp of behavioural psychology is also essential. Without this, you won't convince anyone, and playing a game without conviction is rather pointless.

Part 3: Multiple choice

P = Presenter H = Helena

P: With me today on Infospeak is journalist and writer, Helena Drysdale, Hello, Helena, and welcome to the programme.

- H: Thank you, Good morning.
- P: Helena, you spent the last two years travelling around Europe doing research for a forthcoming book. What were you trying to find out?
- H: Yes, we went in search of Europe's minority languages to determine exactly what state they're all in, particularly given today's climate of mass culture and so on. We travelled right up to northern Scandinavia and the Arctic circle, where the Sami reindeer berders live, and we got down as far as Corsica and Sardinia in the sunny Mediterranean. Then there were the mountains of northern Italy where Ladin is spoken, and we had a rather wet and rainy time in Brittany in the west of France with its Celtic Breton. Thirteen countries and 15 minor languages in all.
- P: By 'us' and 'we', you're referring to your family, of course.
- H: Yes, my husband Richard, and our two young children, Tallulah and Xanthe – not forgetting the Mob, of course, our trusty mobile home.
- P: What was that like? Two years together in a mobile home can't have been easy.
- H: It got a little cramped at times, particularly when the weather kept us in. The kids couldn't run around, they'd start playing up, tempers would overheat, and everyone fell out. But apart from that, fine.
- P: Yes, I can see. And how did you go about gathering your information? What were your sources?
- H: I did some research in the library and on the Internet after we came back, but the only real way to get the kind of information I was looking for was by actually talking to people. We met writers, teachers and artists, who generally gave a more intellectual analysis of the situation. and we were able to balance that with the more down-to earth, personalized accounts of people in the rural areas. That's where many of these languages are most frequently spoken and also where people, particularly the older generation, seemed less reluctant to open up and give us their honest opinion.
- P: And I imagine they had some very interesting stories to tell about the past.
- H: Yes, indeed. For example, we often heard stories of punishments that people received for speaking their own language at school. One old lady in the south of France told us how she used to have to wear a stone or a stick round her neck if she was caught speaking Provençal. She had to keep it on until someone else committed the same offence.

- and then they'd have to wear it. And whoever had it at the end of the day was made to pay a fine, or sometimes even beaten.
- P: Hard to believe, really.
- H: Mm. She's able to laugh about it now, but at the time it was considered deeply shaming to have to wear le symbole, as she called it. Sometimes it could be a wooden shoe or a pottery cow, which represented the country bumpkin, someone to be despised.
- P: And were these punishments effective? Did they contribute to the decline of some of these languages?
- H: Yes, they lowered the status of a language. But sometimes they helped to keep a language going at least in the short term, anyway. They caused resentment and made people more defiant towards the authorities. You know, it can be a bit like pruning a tree—if you cut it back, it grows much stronger. But there were and still are other more powerful forces which represent a much bigger threat to the survival of Europe's minority languages.
- P: By that you mean globalization, I presume.
- H: That's right. And tourism. Now although tourism can give a language status by attracting outside interest in it, it can also have a negative effect on local cultures. You know in one place we visited, the natives moon about the influx of outsiders and bow they buy up land at giveaway prices to build holiday cottages, and how it's destroying their culture, and so on. But then the very same people are selling up their farms so they can run hotels or open souvenir shops. Understandable, perhaps, but they're encouraging the very thing they're complaining about.
- P: Are languages like Sami and Provençal endangered species, then?
- H: Well. I think it's true to say that if no positive action is taken, they'll simply die out. The problem is that some people are indifferent, and even hostile to their own language. They think it's of no use in the modern world, which they so desperately want to be part of. Fortunately, though, there are enough people around who realize that to lose your mother tongue is like losing a part of yourself. Your language makes you who you are. And if you spoke a different language, you'd be a different person. But people on their own can only do so much. It really is up to the European Union to legislate to ensure the survival of minority languages.
- P: And how exactly do you legislate to save a language?

H: Well, I think there are several things you can do. Firstly, of course, the EU would have to bring in ...

I was told the best way to prepare for an interview is by going to the company's website and finding out everything you can about them. The idea, of course, is that it creates a good impression and proves that you are keen on working for them because they can see you've done your homework. The trouble was that they hadn't done theirs - the web page hadn't been updated for over a year, so I asked all these questions about products they didn't produce and subsidiaries that no longer existed. They must have thought I wasn't very well prepared. It wasn't my fault, though, and I kind of lost enthusiasm for the job once I found out what had happened. I mean, it's a bit slack, isn't it?

Speaker 2

So there I was the night before, in the living room talking to the dog. A bit strange, you might think, and you'd probably be right. But I was getting ready for the next day, you see. The dog was the interviewer, and I was trying out all my questions and answers on him. I'm not sure that's what the writer of the article had in mind when she said, 'Rehearse the situation with a friend', but it seemed like a good idea to me. Anyway, it was all a bit of a waste of time, really I overslept the next morning and by the time I got there they'd already taken somebody on.

Speaker 3

'Now you're not to get all uptight and on edge. like you normally do,' was what my mum said. And that's more or less what the careers teacher told us at school: Projecting self-confidence at an interview is vital for success'. Those were his exact words. So I put on my best suit to give me that confidence, cleaned my shoes and off I went. Well, my hands were shaking so much, you wouldn't believe it. I nearly spilt my coffee down my trousers. I think I managed to hide it, though. Course, what I couldn't hide was the fact that I'd failed my maths GCSE. They wouldn't take me on without it. Shame, really - the money wasn't too bad.

Speaker 4

Don't lean back in your chair', he says. 'If you do that, it might look as though you're trying just a bit too hard to cover up your nerves. Bither that or you're not interested in the job.' So according to this Dr Benson, it's advisable to lean forward, keep your legs uncrossed and smile confidently. Well, I did all that. In fact, I smiled so much my face began to ache. But they somehow seemed to realize that I don't normally walk around with a permanent grin from ear to ear they said they were looking for lively, bubbly people for their sales team, and they weren't convinced that I fitted the bill.

Speaker 5

I saw this video in the university careers office where they recommended imagining the interviewer in the bath. playing with a plastic duck, of all things, The idea is that they're only human, so there's nothing to be frightened of. So, anyway, I thought about the type of questions they might ask me and I got to the interview about half an hour early so Loculd go over the answers I was going to give. But, bath or no bath, the interviewer turned out to be not so human after all. It was like an interrogation, and the things he asked were really tricky nothing like what I'd prepared for, I just didn't know what to say. I felt pretty sick about the whole thing afterwards, I can tell you.

Part 2: Sentence completion

Time, ladies and gentlemen, is one of our greatest assets, and in this fast-moving competitive world, poor management of our time is a major cause of stress both in the workplace and at home. The first and most essential element of effective time management is focward planning. If you start the morning by mapping out what you hope to achieve during the day, you can go a long way to avoiding unnecessary frustration and wasted effort. Be realistic, though, in terms of what you hope to accomplish in the time available, and think through carefully how and when you will accomplish it. Unmer expectations will only serve to put you under more pressure, to create more stress - and you'll only have yourself to blame if that happens.

Of course, tiredness - rather than any lack of ability - can often present a major obstacle to our obtaining the goals we've set ourselves, or indeed to meeting the deadlines that others have set for us. If that's the case, stop, turn your computer off, take a break. If you feel you can't go on, or you're just too snowed under, don't make yourself ill. Work should always take second place to your health. It can be counterproductive to carry on regardless, particularly if the next day you have to phone in sick and take time off work.

And also, if time is against you, if you're pressed for time, be prepared to adapt to the circumstances - don't worry if what you produce is less than wonderful. We cannot, we should not always strive for perfection. It slows us down, it reduces productivity and means we have no time for other tasks. Good enough is still good, and in all probability no one will notice the difference. And this applies to the home as well as the workplace. A similar dose of self-discipline is needed when we take on the household chores. Limit the amount of housework you try to do in a day, lower your expectations and relax if the shirts you've just ironed still have creases. It doesn't matter.

Because ultimately, let's face it, what we all work for is to make time for ourselves, to free up time for the things we really want to do outside of work. It's essential to set aside enough time to pursue your interests, to do the things which are most fulfilling for you in life. Many people fail to achieve the right balance between work and relaxation. and once again, stress is the outcome. And just a word of warning here - if by relaxation you understand slumping on the sofa in front of the television, think again. It is a poor use of time, and it usually ends up making you feel more tired, and time-pressured than before. Now, technology has done a great deal

$I = Interviewer \quad A = Adrian$

- I: My guest today is Adrian Mitchell, whose book Who we are and what we want on the subject of family relationships has been at the top of many best-seller lists for the most part of this year. Adrian, I know you've been lecturing in sociology for over 20 years. So, was the book an inevitable consequence of that?
- A: Well, without that background, I don't suppose I'd be writing a book on social issues; but many academics have been in the game for a great deal longer than I have, and they don't feel the need to publish their thoughts for public consumption. I suppose for me it was more that I was talked into it by colleagues of mine who insisted that there was a market for that kind of subject. None of us, though, I don't think, had, er anticipated how well it would do.
- I: And I believe that you've also put your experience as a counsellor to good use in the book.
- A: I like to think so, although I have to admit that I quit counselling several years ago. I'd been doing it for years, and it was certainly something I was passionate about, but there were simply too many things going on. I was stretched to the point that I could no longer say I was fully committed to anything, and that wasn't something I could live with. It wasn't really fair on my wife and children, either.

- I: In your book, you do take pains, I notice, to avoid presenting yourself as the ideal husband. I mean, you're not pretending to have all the solutions.
- A: No, absolutely not. I think I'm a fairly typical 21st-century husband. I want to provide for my family, but I'm grateful that we have my wife's salary. It allows us to do so much more than one income would permit. And, um, like most husbands, I suspect. I'm handy about the house, but I don't insist on fixing the car or the computer myself - I leave that to the experts, I think I'm also typical in the way I tend to -er, shall we say overlook certain domestic chores that need doing. I will do them, but I do need a bit of pushing from my wife. I would certainly argue against the idea that men have lost sense of who they are. Our roles may have changed over the years - but that doesn't mean we're confused about them.
- I: Yes, but it's a notion that seems popular on daytime television. Um. in the book, you thank your children in the acknowledgements, but after that, there's no further mention of them. Did you make a conscious decision to exclude them?
- Well, yes. If I'd written about them, it would have felt like a form of exploitation, I suppose, Even if they'd agreed to appear in the book, they would have done so just to make me happy because that's what children do - look for approval. Well, we all do, I suppose. And you don't know whether they're going to feel the same way once they're older and in a position to make a more informed decision. I can see why people draw from their own personal experiences when they're writing a research-based book, but this has to be weighed up against the impact your writing may have on others.
- I: A chapter I found particularly interesting was the one on how the media reports on social issues. You refer to the way it portrays single parents, single mothers in particular.
- A: Yes, unfortunately, many journalists are happy to cut and paste their information from other articles doing the rounds on the Internet; this doesn't necessarily mean that the bare facts, the numbers, are wrong, but there's a lack of balance. So in the case of single parents, it may be true that numbers are on the rise, but the stories presented to us fail to discuss how many of these parents are able to continue working or return to further education. They're still contributing to society. But headlines with this kind of positive development don't sell copies, I suppose.

- I: So where do you see marriage as an institution in, say, 20 years' time? Do you think it will come to be seen as simply unnecessary?
- A: Hardly. You only need look at the number of commercial ventures set up within the wedding industry. People are just as keen to get married as ever; just perhaps not in the way that their grandparents did, It doesn't have to be in a church, the dress doesn't have to be white and people no longer want towels and whiteware as gifts. One thing that hasn't changed is the fact that a high percentage of couples go into marriage not anticipating the kind of challenges likely to arise as a result of becoming a 'unit'. A lot of married life involves meeting halfway, and if you're not prepared to do that, then you're in for trouble. And don't forget, just because tradition is less important in some western countries. this isn't the case in others.
- I: Adrian, thank you. We're going to take a break, but when we come back, Adrian is ...

I = Interviewer M - Miriam

- I: Miriam, your new play, which opens next week, is described as a black comedy - not something you're known for. Are you at all anxious or is opening night an occasion which no longer bothers you?
- M: Well, it depends on the production, but in this case, I've been privileged again to have Malcolm Rush as a director. He doesn't care whether you're exhausted; mentally, physically, emotionally - it's immaterial, he'll just continue pushing until every scene is simply perfect. You don't just learn the part - you live it, which takes away any fears you might have of not being able to persuade an audience you're
- I: Malcolm does have a reputation of being quite the dictator. No one dares voice their opinion, I hear.
- M: Well, I do! Malcolm is entirely willing to listen to your point of view once you gain his respect. When we're working on a play, it's a two-way process in which one person comes up with an idea - we see how it works out - and then we don't hold back on any constructive criticism. Actors I've worked with, some of whom have been rather new to the stage, know that he's going to be tough with you - but once you've proved yourself, it's all about cooperation and being open to change.

Extract Two

M = Man W = Woman

- M: We finally delivered our presentation this morning. The surprising thing, for me, I suppose, was that I actually got on all right with the other students in our group, even Simon, and he's usually so argumentative and I'd thought that we'd never get anything done with him there. Our discussions generated ideas I hadn't even thought of.
- W: There were three of us working together on our last project. And ves, I think that like that we were probably more creative than if we'd been working alone. I wasn't keen on the idea of collaboration at first. I mean, I didn't know what the other people were like to work with, but my worries came to nothing in the end.
- M: So did you find the project easy to do?
- W: Not at all it was still a challenge. For my section, I volunteered to do the research on a German company and I had ample time to do it, if I'm honest. And there was plenty of information online which I could refer to. The feedback I got from the tutor, though, was that I needed to take a more critical approach and out my own views forward. I knew as I was writing the project that I wasn't doing that - but I'm just not used

1 = Interviewer D = David

- I: So David, with the next rally less than 12 hours away, how confident are you of holding your position in front?
- D: Well the team has done an incredible job sorting out all the problems with the car-it's running at peak performance now. The big issue, as you may know, is that my co-driver, Scott King, broke his leg last week and so that's it - he's out for the foreseeable future. Fortunately for us, Eddy Houseman stepped in at the last minute, though, of course, he's never partnered me before, which is a bit of a concern. At least the conditions are favourable - the worst of the ice has cleared - just a few patches left we can deal with.
- I: Scott's been with you from the start, hasn't he?
- D: Yes, people often underrate the co-driver's role, the glory always goes to the driven But it's Scott who has the map and the notes. Without him I'd be truly driving blind. You have to have complete faith that what he says is right, I have to know exactly how fast I can take a corner, and besure that we don't end up rolling into a ditch. That's not to say that he's always to blame for every crash! And I don't know how Eddy's going to deal with my temper - Scott's got used to it after all this time ...

I went to, if you like, 'normal' school Monday to Thursday, and I didn't particularly excel in anything, and if that'd been my sole form of learning experience. I probably wouldn't be where I am today, I mean, playing in front of huge European audiences. You see, on Fridays I went to an independent school, where they set up a project for the day, say something on volcanoes. You learnt the usual stuff, but then they encouraged you to respond in your own way. So, for example, the arty kids would make a sculpture, the practicalminded kids built models, and I used to get the instruments out and compose something, just in the corner by myself at first, but then I gained confidence. For me, that's what education should be about, getting kids to express themselves, to use their imagination as a means of developing their abilities.

Speaker 2

I think I got into this profession partly as a reaction to my own teachers. I wanted to show them how teaching should be done. You know, there's nothing worse than when a teenager has a go at something and then they're criticized for getting it wrong. It humiliates them, makes them reluctant to speak out in front of who they see as the brainy kids. My colleagues and I all have the attitude that participation should be rewarded. See-rather than just telling them, You're wrong' it's better to help them out with a few more leading questions that'll direct them to the right answer. In that way you're sending the message that it's better to have a go even if their answer isn't quite right than sit there in silence and be excluded.

Speaker 3

There was never any doubt that we were going to send Andrew to boarding school it's a tradition that goes back four generations in our family - although Andrew is back with us at weekends and I only ever returned for the holidays. The academic advantage is clear - with far smaller classes you get greater individual attention. That allows you to really master a subject. But also, the reason why this kind of private education system works is that the whole ethos is about becoming self-sufficient - it is up to the individual student to ensure they spend a good amount of time on their homework or studying in the library. It is up to them to be in class on time and keep their rooms in order. That kind of discipline is invaluable when it comes to the real world.

For the last 30 years or so, the majority of schools have allowed boys and girls to study side by side. Whereas their integration within the classroom may benefit them in terms of their social development, the studies we have carried out show that boys consistently underperform when learning alongside girls. Our investigations were based on observations within classrooms that we visited as well as the examination results from a hundred schools over the last three years. Many parents find the notion of educating their son or daughter separately from members of the opposite sex rather old-fashioned, but I believe that school should provide the opportunity for a learner to do as well as they possibly can. While not every child may be naturally gifted, it is possible to develop their intelligence to a far greater extent in the right learning environment.

Speaker 5

My father was rather unconventional and he took it upon himself to educate me at home. This often involved visiting castles, art galleries, and, of course, the wonderful Science Museum, And that's where it all began for me: I was fascinated by the models of atoms and by the early microscopes. I would read up about the stuff I'd seen at home and my father would always say 'When you're ready, we'll have a little test and see what you can remember,' but there was no strict schedule. He knew that it takes time to absorb information. In my laboratory I have to do everything with extreme care and it is vital you do not rush things, but the end result makes it all worthwhile. The same approach should be applied to education.

Unit 6 (Page 78)

Part 2: Sentence completion

Good morning everyone. Today, as part of our investigation into sleep disorders, we'll be looking at the condition known as narcolepsy. Narcolepsy can be defined as a chronic neurological disorder which causes excessive sleepiness and frequent daytime attacks. It's not just a case of dozing off and snoozing in a lecture - narcoleptics actually can't stop themselves from falling asleep during inappropriate occasions. And possibly herein lies the problem - sleepiness can be caused by many factors so it can take many months, years even, before a diagnosis, a correct one. I mean, is eventually made by a doctor, but at the moment, narcolepsy is known to affect at least 2500 people in the UK. Perhaps there are more. The exact cause of narcolepsy is a matter of debate, but it's widely believed to be the result of a genetic mutation. The result is that the brain doesn't produce enough of the hormone that regulates a person's sleepwake cycles. For many narcolepties, the symptoms aren't just limited to nodding off when they shouldn't. They can also suffer a sudden loss of muscle control whenever they've just experienced a surge of emotion - perhaps they were angry, or fearful or were even just laughing at a good joke. Then, during the night, some narcoleptics suffer from sleep paralysis and during the day, in some cases, even hallucinations are possible

Let's think about the consequences of this disorder. Not only do narcoleptics have to put up with the physical challenges, but they have to deal with the ignorance of other people. Sufferers are often mistakenly considered to be inebriated or lazy, for example. Narcoleptics report that one of the things that really begins to disappear as a result of their condition is their social life. It's simply too difficult to manage a day or evening out. And it's other people's prejudice again that prevents the majority of narcolepsy sufferers from getting a foothold on the career ladder - they can't even get an interview in many cases - not even an initial one. You can imagine how demoralizing this must be. And, in fact, the problem exists not just for narcoleptics hoping to pursue a white-collar profession, but also for those seeking manual work. Any job that requires a person to operate machinery will probably not be open to narcoleptics - ostensibly for reasons of safety. And there's another consequence of suffering from this disorder - perhaps the one that the families of narcoleptics find most difficult to deal with. Because narcoleptics have to keep as calm as possible - all the time - in order to avoid the sudden loss of muscle control we talked about earlier - it may involve a personality change - and this must be a hard thing indeed to bear.

Currently, there's no cure for ...

P = Presenter DE = Dr Evans L = Lynnie

P: In search of a more youthful appearance, many people nowadays are turning to Botox®, the botulism toxin which is purified and used in small doses to remove unwanted wrinkles. With me is Dr Duncan Evans, who regularly turns up at parties to inject the guests with the toxin, and Lynnie Highfield, one of Dr Evans' patients and a regular Botox partygoer. Dr Evans, perhaps I should begin by asking why this

- treatment takes place at parties, and not in a surgery?
- DE: That's very simple, really. It's easier, and more convenient, for people to go to a social gathering at a friend's house, than to give up their valuable time getting into central London. When I first started out in this business. I'd often be asked to go to the homes of the rich and famous, the type of people who didn't want to get caught by the press going into a clinic. Now, though, it's mainly people who've simply got too much going on in their lives to justify making the journey in.
- P: Is that your case, Lynnie?
- L: Yes, it is. Plus, of course, we have a good time. I've been to several parties in the last couple of years and you tend to meet up with the same people. That's largely because the benefits of the injection tend to wear off after three or four months so we all keep going back for more.
- P: Is it painful?
- L: Nowhere near as painful as having your legs waxed. I can tell you! Just a slight discomfort as the needle goes in, that's all. And there are no serious side effects - or so Dr Evans tells us - just some minor bruising and an outside chance of getting some fluey. cold-like symptoms.
- P: So, Dr Evans, how does it work? Why would anyone want to have a poison injected into their body?
- DE: Well, yes, poison it most certainly is, and a deadly one at that. But injected in small quantities into the forehead it does nothing more than paralyse the muscles that cause frown lines and wrinkles. Different people use it for different reasons - to make them feel better, to look younger, to enable them to get work on television - whatever, Of course, I need to set a good example if I want to convince people of the benefits of the treatment, so I regularly hand over the needle to my wife, who does it for me. She's a qualified nurse, so I have every confidence in her.
- P: Does it work for you?
- DE: Well, I make a living, if that's what you mean, but perhaps I should have started younger - as you can see, I've still got one or two faint lines there.
- P: And how about you, Lynnie? Why do you have the injections?
- L: For me, it's a way of growing old gracefully. I mean, we all use moisturizer, we all take care of ourselves. I think it's just an extension of that. Many people might baulk at the price, but I think it's tairly affordable. It's certainly worth doing, anyway. I look upon it now as normal maintenance - something that needs doing on a regular basis. I also like doing meditation, as well. I want to feel beautiful on the inside as well as on the outside.

- P: And have other people noticed the effects?
- L: Yes, they have. And they've grown used to my new look now, of course, but when I first went for treatment, they didn't say. 'Oh, you do look younger', which is, of course, why I had it done. It was more of a 'you look less stressed or 'you don't look so depressed. Before the treatment, you see, I had these terrible hereditary lines, a kind of constant. frown, which made it look as though I was permanently unhappy. I was always saying. Tm fine. Really It's just the way I look'. Now I don't have to make excuses for my appearance anymore.
- P: You must be very proud of your work, Dr Evans, knowing the effect it can have on people's lives. And it's fun, too, I imagine.
- DE: It's certainly a wonderful feeling seeing people grow in confidence and self-esteem. I'm not a great one for being charming and chatty when I'm working, though - that would just be too draining. Dealing with 20-odd patients in one evening is not normal, by any stretch of the imagination, and it takes a lot out of you. But no one seems to notice that. I'm obviously so fresh-faced and young-looking ...
- P: Now it's funny you should mention that, because I've been dving to ask you about your age ...

Unit 8 (Page 102)

Part 2: Sentence completion

Good morning. My name's Andy Brown. and I'm the co-founder of Kingdom Games. It's a pleasure to be here - and I'm boping that if you're not into gaming already, I will have convinced you that you're definitely missing out by the time I've finished this talk.

Well, the industry has come a long way since the basic pixellated formats of the 1980s. In one respect, the older games and modern games are similar: we play them for the thrill, for the victory - but they're very different in another. Many modern games engage the player emotionally and intellectually, As a product, I suppose we could describe them if you like, as a marriage, between art, when we consider their visual impact on us, and science; the technology that allows us to step inside these very different worlds. And in those days, back in the 80s - even up until the last ten years - we know that it was largely young men that were the target market. But today we have to acknowledge that gaming has been fully integrated into mainstream culture. The equipment has been moved into the living room for the whole family to play. Whether it's a Sony PlayStation* or Xbox®, pretty much every household has one. The way I see it, developers have both responded to and instigated this

You might ask, where do developers get their inspiration from? Well, numerous sources, of course, but at the moment, we can see the definite influence of classic cinema. For example, in the past, good and evil could easily be recognized. - through the characters you created, through the options they were offered. You knew which side you were on. Well, we're maturing now, along with our audiences. It's no longer black and white – but every shade of grey. And one of the consequences of this, for my team, anyway, is the need to establish mood - a sense of anxiety, of despair, for example, through the use of lighting. And this is something we're working on in our current projects with - I believe - great

Some things, I guess, won't change. There are the central and basic concepts, or themes, that create authenticity and purpose in a game. Combat is oneyou'll always need a good fight whether it's between unidentified enemy soldiers. aliens, zombies ... whatever ... and the problem-solving element is also vital. And finally, and I think this is true for all forms of storytelling, you need the element of exploration. It's in our human nature to pursue this.

So why are some sections of society so anti-gaming? What is it that creates fear and ignorance amongst people - people who've usually never picked up a console. for themselves? In large part, I feel this Is down to the media. They never seem to miss an opportunity to focus on a story or a piece of research that shows the industry in a bad light. Look, it's basic common sense that if you let your kid play for 24 hours straight, they re missing out on other things – on life – but let's have some balanced reporting, please.

For a start, parents and teachers both seem to overlook something important. about the gaming industry - they just don't know about the great number of career opportunities it offers. And this is an industry that now turns over huge profits annually - so worth getting into. And I think there's a feeling amongst some parents, a suspicion in fact, that gaming is somehow rotting their kids' brains. But the evidence is there to prove otherwise. Now I've got a vested interest in all this, of course, but if you look at the research, we know for a fact that not only do kids get more creative through game playing, but they also get better at logic. Surely that's something that most people would be happy to see developing in their child.

Now, one future development concerns crowd-funding, which ...

I think a lot of the science fiction scenarios of miniature computers the size of a matchbox and phones you can wear like a button on your jacket are going to be too impractical to be put to general use. You only have to look at a widescreen TV to realize there's little chance of that happening. My own belief is that electronic gadgetry will actually take over our living space - you won't be able to move in your own home for fear of knocking into some device or other. That's a big shame, really - life was so much simpler before, so much more free of clutter. And I'm not talking about the dim and distant past here, but a relatively recent one.

There's little doubt that the average lifespan will be greater, but I can't help feeling more than a little concerned about the quality of life we'll be leading. when we reach the end of our days. I'm not sure, for example, that we'll have achieved what we need to in terms of finding cures for certain degenerative diseases such as Alzheimer's or Parkinson's. There's a great deal of enthusiastic talk about genetics and how absolutely marvellous it is that we've mapped the human genome. Now that's all very well, but I'm afraid I just can't see myself, or anyone else for that matter, playing tennis at the age of 120.

It always irritates me when people go on about population growth and how it's getting out of control and so on. If you look at the figures, you'll see that predictions of exploding populations made 20 or 30 years ago are simply not coming true. It's probably the same people that worry about the number of vehicles on the roads, as well, Let's face it though, 15 years from now most of us will be working from home on a computer, which means fewer people gerting stuck in jams on their way to work, and a consequent reduction in pollution. Now that's definitely something worth looking forward to, isn't it?

Speaker 4

They sent me on a computer training course last month - at my age! We had a right laugh about it in the office. I can tell you. Still, you've got to keep up with it all, else they won't keep you on, will they? There seems to be more and more technology every day - it's going to change the way they do things here completely, you know, in 15 years from now you won't recognize the place at all.

Of course, I'll have left long before then, and I'll probably be enjoying a long and healthy retirement somewhere. But it does make you wonder whether they're up to something - you know, Big Brother and all that. I've always been suspicious of change, me. Can't help it.

Speaker 5

Where I live, you'd be forgiven for thinking the size of the population is mushrooming. Every weekend there are more and more houses going up, and you see more and more traffic on the roads. But what's happening, of course, is that the existing population is financially healthier than it used to be, so more and more people can afford to buy themselves a second home in the country - which is where they're all driving out to on a Friday evening. And because the price of land is so expensive, these places are gradually shrinking in size - so much so that by the time I've raised enough money to buy my own place, I won't be able to swing a cat in it. Sounds funny, but it's a real misance. I can tell you.

Unit 9 (Page 116)

Part 2: Sentence completion

Well, hello everyone. I think most of you know that I recently went to Queenstown for my work placement, um, at the Lake Hotel, and the person I was attached to for the week was the from desk clerk. So basically I was learning all about what a typical day for him involved and what kind of skills you needed to do that specific job. I had a choice of three hotels that I could work in for the placement - but I ended up deciding on the Lake Hotel because it isn't really affected by seasonal tourism. A high proportion of its guests are there for conferences and meetings so it's pretty much fully booked on a continual basis and I wanted a bit of a challenge. Anyway, as soon as I walked into the hotel, I suppose I was struck. by how professional everyone seemed. Of course, your room and the hotel facilities are important, but actually, I realized it's the way the hotel staff are presented that you notice first, and in particular, how stylish and neat the uniform looks. I think I'll definitely have to smarten up once I start work for real. Well, getting back to the front desk clerk - his name was Andre, he was Swiss, and he'd been working at the hotel for about three years. As I watched him talk to the guests. I saw that he was using their names quite a bit, which is apparently the hotel policy-it's a way of building a professional relationship. Then later Andre explained that whenever he deals with a guest, he makes sure he finds out the nationality of that person, because that sort of information will tell him what their requirements are likely to be, and so enable him to give them the best service possible. So, for example, in his experience, German travellers tend to have done all their research before they arrive and only want basic advice, but Chinese travellers often expect everything to be arranged for them, apparently.

I worked from 7am to 3pm every day - under Andre's supervision, of course - and there was honestly a constant stream of people checking in all the time I was at the front desk. Then, of course, other guests would come and request a room move or extend their stay or something, and what really impressed me about Andre was how he managed to inform every department in the hotel about those changes, almost immediately in fact, no matter how busy he was. There's a daily meeting with management, too, but I didn't go along to that.

Lasked Andre if there was anything he disliked about the job, and I thought he would have said something like guest complaints or working nights. (I don't know how people get used to the might shift.) It was dealing with foreign currency transactions, though, that he said he had problems with. He said he would always delegate it to an assistant. if he could. I think he just preferred interacting with guests - and I don't think he was just making small talk with them - I think his interest in helping them was actually quite genuine.

I spent quite a bit of time giving guests information about things to do in Queenstown - including where to go shopping and buy decent souvenirs - that was more for the tour groups and older guests. The younger ones were there primarily for the adventure activities - that was the main attraction and they wanted advice on which companies to book with. So part of my job was to promote some of the more established and reputable tour operators and I was fine with that because I'd expected it and got myself prepared. The local restaurants, though, were a different matter. I was surprised that guests were asking me about them. because obviously there's one in the hotel and you really want the guests to be eating there. I just had to admit that I'd only just started work - and I'd have to get Andre to help them. I did ask him later why it would be in the hotel's interest to recommend other places for the guests to eat or visit, even. He said that in order for the hotel's profits to continue to grow, it was essential to keep on building up customer loyalty - and that meant providing the best service possible. I could see what he meant. I suppose a lot of hotels have a similar outlook and philosophy. Well, I would definitely recommend Queenstown if you haven't done your work placement yet, It wasn't until I began working there that I realized how huge its hospitality industry actually is.

Part 3: Multiple choice

P = Presenter J = James

- P: It started with road rage in the 90s, then we had air rage, and now it's trollev rage, surf rage, movie rage and even dot.com rage. Anger, it scoms, is all the rage these days. But why? With us is James Frith, head of road safety at the British Automobile Club, James, what makes people so aggressive on the roads?
- J: Well, it's all about control, really. Once people get in their car, they feel a false, a dangerous sense of security and control. They're in their own little world, their own safe environment where they can deceive themselves into thinking they're better drivers than they really are. But this, of course, contrasts with events that happen outside the car, events over which they have absolutely no control whatsoever.
- P: And when they lose control, they lose their temper right?
- J: That's right. For instance, most people set deadlines for their road journeys, and if someone threatens to prevent them from meeting that deadline, from not getting where they want to, when they want to, they blow a fuse. And that's when we get road rage, or in many cases now, revenge rage.
- P: Another rage! What's revenge rage,
- J: Well, it's similar to road rage, but less active. People get worked up inside. but just think nasty thoughts about other road users, without actually doing anything. They imagine, for example, going after someone who's cut them up and forcing them off the road. The problem is they get so caught up in their angry dreams of revenge that they fail to concentrate on the essential task of driving safely. And there's more of a risk of them causing an accident themselves than there is for the driver who has offended them.
- P: And who are these angry people. these so-called 'road' and 'revenge ragers?

- J: We carried out a study recently and we found it was mainly 18- to 25-year-old men who committed acts of road rage, and these people often had criminal records, histories of violence or drug or alcohol problems. In the case of 'revenge ragers', people who merely fantasize about violent acts, they are more evenly spread across the age groups and between the sexes. The majority, though, are low-mileage motorists, those who only average between 30 and 60 miles a week. And the people who are most likely to trigger revenge rage, the ones who cause these people to lose their temper are inexperienced youngsters who drive quickly, elderly drivers, and drivers of big articulated lorries
- P: Makes you wonder why people don't just get the bus! Surely that's a calmer, more comfortable way to travel? Or is there bus rage, too?
- J: Not exactly. But people do get fed up, don't they, when the bus just crawls its way along the route because the driver's busy taking people's money, giving them change or answering questions. And other road users don't respect the bus lanes, so you can end up in the same congestion, the same anger inducing situations that you tried to avoid by leaving the carat home
- P: So what is the solution? How can drivers keep their calm on the roads?
- J: I'm not sure there are any easy answers. But in one experiment, Dr David Lewis, the man who coined the term 'road rage', gave 25 stressed out city drivers a kit containing real grass and a spray of grass scent. He told them to park their cars, take off their shoes and socks, and enjoy the sensation of grass beneath their bare feet
- P: The point being ...?
- J: Well, changes in their heart rate and blood pressure were measured and they were clearly more relaxed with the smell and sensation of grass around them. Now, you'd expect a higher proportion of calm drivers on country roads, because there is considerably less traffic, but it's the combination of silence in the car, the smell of our immediate environment. and what we can feel that can really help calm us down and have a positive influence on our driving habits.
- P: So can we expect grass kits to be on the market soon?
- J: Possibly, I'm sure the research will be put to some use. What we do have already, though, is a kind of back-seat. computer. Engineers have developed a hi-tech car which criticizes drivers when they are behaving rashly

- or have poor control of the car, A message comes up on the control panel. It also praises them for good road manners when they are driving considerately. If the driving becomes too erratic, the car stops.
- P: Sounds like a good idea.
- J: As long as drivers don't rely on it. We're always interested in technology that helps drivers' control, but not technology that takes it away from them. Certainly, though, we've all been in that situation with someone in the passenger seat telling us to calm down - it can be annoying, but very effective. And if this works in much the same way, then fine though I can see stressed out drivers becoming even more irate when their car suddenly stops!
- P: Yes, indeed! Now, James, some of our listeners have written in with their own suggestions as to how wecan maintain our composure in the car. Alan Hammans writes in from Tooting telling us how he uses spoken word tapes

W = Woman M = Man

- W: Did you see that programme on global warming the other day? I thought it was kind of irresponsible to present the views of a minority of scientists who think that man-made global warming doesn't exist.
- M: Yes, but remember that one of the first things we were taught on the course is that you must have a balanced approach to reporting. That means allowing the public to hear both sides of the argument. At the same time, you and I know perfectly well that a real balance doesn't exist. You wouldn't, for example, give as many column inches to the enemy opinion in a war, would you? And the same goes for the global warming debate. I'd say that, realistically, far more attention is given to the scientific view that climate change is happening - and not to the lew voices that deny it.
- W: I guess so. After the programme I read a lot of comments posted on the channel's website. There was quite a bit of mixed reaction. Some people were making the point 'if global warming isn't man-made, why bother taking steps to save the environment?" That's why I thought the programme had been rather reckless. But I suppose that if the media really had a lot of influence, people would have changed their behaviour already, like stop using their cars so much, You know what people are like - only government regulations will stop them from polluting and messing up the natural world - that's what it'll take in the end.

I = Interviewer A = Andy

- I: Andy, your company, Kiss Chocolates was established a good 20 years. before you took over. What made you suddenly decide to take a leap into chocolate-making?
- A: Actually a combination of random events. I was made redundant in 2002, and although I absolutely loved advertising, it was a relief to leave because it meant that all the uncertainty about whether the job would last was gone. At the same time, my wife had just happened. to come across the chocolate shop and was buying a gift box, when she overheard the owner mention har desire to retire. We both thought. the product was excellent - and we both knew there would always be a demand for chocolate.
- I: Yes, indeed! And there are probably a lot of people listening who are very envious of you. What's the best part of the job for you. Andy?
- A: Well, the product is certainly hard to resist! But because people come in to buy the chocolate as a gift, as a token of love or of appreciation for another person, you never have to face anyone in a had mood. That's what makes it all so rewarding for me, even more than the prospect of long-term financial security.

J = Jennifer A = Andrew

- J: I have to say that I found The Children of Hurin completely absorbing, far more so than I expected. But it's hardly uplifting, is it?
- A: No. Even from the early pages, one has a great sense that all is not going to end well for the central character, Turin. He is a hero in the sense that he is a brave, honourable man on a mission, but fate delivers him one cruel blow after another. As events unfold, you can see how tragedy is inescapable.
- J: Now the book is based on various manuscripts that JRR Tolkien never completed before he died. And it's taken his son Christopher 30 years to put them together as a single cohesive SICEV.
- That's right and overall, he really has produced a thing of beauty. Readers will notice, however, that one passage may be written in some kind of ancient English and then the next in a more contemporary manner as you'd expect in a book pieced. together from manuscripts written over a 50-year period, and that can be a little distracting. Tolkien's characterization is sometimes underdeveloped but not so this time, as Christopher has given us a hero we can identify ...

Part 2: Sentence completion

Well, hello everyone. My name's Amanda Tyler and I've come to tell you something about my work as a waxwork sculptor. Um, I spend nearly all of my time hidden away with my colleagues in the studio at the wax museum. You might imagine we have a light and airy warehouse space. That would be nice. But actually we don't have much sun coming in at all because we're down in the basement. It feels a bit sad at times, to be honest! It makes a nice change to be here with so many people and some natural light.

I suppose I became interested in sculpting at school, where I was taking classes in art and design. My teacher was very encouraging and she encouraged me to go and specialize at Loughborough University on their course which was then referred to as Fine Arts. I suspect the title may have changed since I was Well, firstly, I'd like to tell you a bit about the process that goes into making a waxwork figure. Um ... the first stage is, in fact, the one I like most. That's when we get the measurements of our subject - the person we want to make a model of. This is a real highlight of the job, as you get to travel and meet celebrities. It's not easy though, getting them to sit still for two hours or more while you struggle to get the information you need.

Now, as you can't have failed to notice. there's a hig clay head on the table and even at this early stage, I'm hoping that you can recognize the well-known newsreader, David Wainwright, from Channel 5. So at the moment, as I said, he's made of clay which I've moulded onto an 'armature'. That's this thing here, which is basically a frame made out of wire netting. Back in the studio I have an armature for his whole body and that's got rods as well, metal ones, to give it support and strength, and I've cut those to size for his arms and legs.

Now, another thing that we sculptors have to bear in mind is that the public have certain expectations about the way a famous person might sit or stand or move, and if we don't get that right, then our wax figure won't be convincing. So it's really vital that the position we put the subject in looks authentic. When I've finished David here, he'll be sitting behind a desk, leaning back slightly.

The whole thing is a very slow process. It can take me about three or four weeks just to get to the clay model stage we have here, and I may need as much as five months to make one figure - from the time I start to the time it's ready to go on display.

So, what's next? Well, from this clay model I'll make a plaster mould and fill that with hot liquid wax. And when it's cooled, hey presto, we have our wax head. Um ... then it's time for the eyes. What we do is select two acrylic eyeballs that are roughly the same size as the subjects.

Then we touch them up by hand with watercolours to get a more exact copy. That's usually my job. Then I hand it over to our make-up artist, who uses oil paint together with more conventional cosmetics for the rest of the head.

The hair is probably ...

I = Interviewer S = Sandra

D = David

- 1: On this week's In Partnership programme we talk to Sandra Peyton and David Sadler, who together run the successful media company, Advert Eyes, specializing in the making of TV commercials. Sandra, if I could start with you. What were you doing before you set up in parmership with David and what made you change?
- S: Well, I was directing er, drama mostly - for a small satellite TV company. It was an interesting, experimental time for me - they were a young, dynamic group and seemed to be going places. But these were troubled times for the business in general and they just weren't making enough money. Anyway, things weren't looking too good for me; as I'd been the last to arrive, I reckoned I'd probably he the first to have to leave.
- I: So you jumped before you were pushed, so to speak.
- S: That's right, and that was a great shame, because I'd never felt so comfortable working in a team as Icid with that group of people.
- David, you had a similar background, didn't you?
- D: Yes, I'd also made a name for myself directing TV drama, but with the much larger Trenton TV. I left them because they were moving in a different direction to where I wanted to go. But the experience proved

- invaluable for the future I can see that now.
- I: In what way?
- D: Working in close collaboration with others is an integral part of this business – that's always been clear to me but I came to realize that you can't rely on other people to make things work. It's a tough old world and ultimately it's down to you - it's a question of attitude. Things only happen if you let them - and if you only see grey skies and gloomy days ahead, that's what you'll get.
- I: So the whole thing focused you for your future with Advert Eyes.
- D: That's right. I did a lot of growing up with Trenton.
- I: Well, tell us how you met each other,
- S: We were introduced at a party by a mutual friend. I remember I was very wary of David at first. He already had quite a reputation in the husiness his past work spoke for itself. And he looked so serious, so apparently indifferent to everything. He mentioned some vague idea he had for setting up a business, something to do with advertising - but that wasn't what struck me most. I just couldn't get over how animated, how passionate he became when he talked about - well, everything really. It was difficult not to be carried along by his
- So when he asked you to join him, you had no hesitation in accepting?
- D: Well, it was actually Sandra who asked me. And I was the one who had no hesitation. My colleagues at Trenton had warned me against going into business with a complete unknown - they said it was too much of a gamble. But when I met Sandra. it was like looking into a mirror. Here at last was someone on my wavelength, someone who looked at life through the same camera lens. And, anyway, I felt it was time to do something different, to live a little dangerously.
- I: And has it been? Dangerous, I mean.
- D: Anything but Funnily enough, though, it's turned out that we do have quite a lot of differences, but these have all been to our advantage. Sandra, for example, has much more of a business brain than 1 do.
- I: Is that right, Sandra?
- S: Well, yes, it seems to be a hidden talent of mine. But I've had to learn the hard way. Raising money, for example, was an absolute nightmare we just couldn't seem to get the
- 1: That must have been quite disheartening.
- S: Well, no, you can't afford to let things like that get you down. It was no good getting upset about it; throwing a tantrum in a bank manager's office is never a good idea - you might need to go back there one day. No. I just couldn't work out what the problem was, given our experience and the way the advertising market was shaping up at the time. We were just a small concern, asking for a small amount of money.

- I: But you obviously got the money.
- S: Yes, I met an investor who understood what we were about and then, once we'd made a couple of ads, money was easier to come by.
- I: David, how does, er, advertising work compare with TV drama? Is it very different?
- D: Well, for a start there's more money around than for normal TV work, and that can be very liberating. But the market's understanding of quality may not be the same as yours and you find your creativity stifled. Yes, it's our own company, and it may seem a creative business to an outsider. But an advert is not your own baby in the same way that a TV drama might be. There are too many people who have a say in what you do and what goes into the advert.
- S: Yes, I'd go along with that, although for me, running a business can be incredibly creative.
- I: So what does the future hold for Advert Eyes? What are your plans for the company?
- S: Well, we can't really say too much at the moment. It's not that we're not willing to, it's just that we're not entirely certain how things will work out ourselves.
- D: That's right. The normal thing might he to look at some type of long-term growth for the business, but at the moment we're concentrating on consolidating our position, rather than branching out. Who knows what the future will bring?
- I: Sandra, David, the very best of luck for the future. There we must leave it. Thank you.

S&D: Thank you.

I could barely string two sentences together when I first arrived, and now For reasonably fluent. In that sense, then, I've achieved what I set out to do just by being here and mixing with the locals. I've met some great people since I got here, especially the family I'm living with. But there's a big downside to all this. I decided to come here on my year out because it's so different to all the other places I could have gone to. Plus it seemed so exciting when I came here two years ago. However, that was on holiday and I realize now that living here. is actually rather dull. I really wish I'd gone somewhere on the mainland nowmy girlfriend's having a great time there.

My father studied here as a young man, so I knew quite a lot about the country before I came. And when the head of my company's overseas operations told me our branch here wasn't doing too well. and would I please go and sort things out, I was very happy to accept. My husband came out shortly after I did and like me, immediately fell in love with the place. The pace of life suits us to a tee and the food is just out of this world. Ultimately, though, we're home birds and when this posting's over we'll want to go back to be nearer our grundchildren – if we ever have any, that is!

I was working in the dullest job you can imagine - nine to five every day on the computer, answering customers' email queries. But it was thanks to that job that I got to know Patti, who was over on a work exchange programme in another department. She only stayed for three months, though, so after that nearly all our contact was by email. Of course, you can't keep something going like that indefinitely, so I took the plunge and moved out here. Life is fine - despite the overcast skies and regular downpours! I have to admit, though, it does get me down sometimes. I'd like to get back home more often, but it's just too far.

I only wish I'd made the break earlier. It's so vibrant in this part of the world - there's so much more going on. I think if I was still back home, I'd be so depressed, what with the current climate there and so on. The fact is I was in a bit of a rut. I was sick of the same old thing, day in, day out and I thought, There's got to be more to life than this'. So I looked into the price of property in different parts of southern Europe, and this area was one of the cheapest. It didn't take me long to settle in - the language isn't much of a problem and I've even got myself a little part-time job. Keeps me out of trouble!

Speaker 5

A few years ago I set up in business with a friend of mine. Then I decided to go it alone and bought out my partner's share. Unfortunately, before long, things started to go wrong and I was up to my eyes in debt. Call it cowardice, but I just couldn't deal with it and I meved out here. It got me out of a mess, but I can't say I'm having the time of my life. I know a lot of different people here, but I just don't seem to fit in with them. We share the same language - more or less - but we're worlds apart in most other respects. One thing's for sure - if ever I do go back to face the music, it'll be for good.

We used to live above a gym. I say used to 'cause they had to close it. down and go somewhere else. Some of the neighbours got together, see, and got someone from the council to come round. It wasn't so much the music because the place was pretty well soundproofed. It was more all the coming and going - especially at night, around 10ish, when it shut and the people would all leave at the same time and then one engine after another would start up. In the winter they'd leave them running for a bit - time to defrost the windows, I suppose - and the neighbours said it made too much of a racket, I can't say I noticed it much, though live and let live, I say. We've all got to make a living somehow.

Speaker 2

Well, one day I was upstairs in my office and was just about to start on a new chapter when I heard this - noise. At first. I thought someone was actually in pain and I leapt up to the window - but then I saw my neighbour Shella and I guess a couple of her friends in her back room. What they were doing, you see, was practising for the local amateur operatic group. The din was unbearable and it completely put me off my writing. And I've got deadlines to meet that I cannot put off and I was getting nowhere! It went on every morning for a fortnight and then just suddenly stopped. Perhaps they went to practise elsewhere. I live in dread that it'll start up again.

Nothing but trouble, that man. Fancy bringing a cockerel to live in a residential area! That sort of thing you'd expect in the countryside, but not here. Being a cockerel, it would start at five - this awful racket and it'd wake up the baby and she'd start wailing so there was no way we could ignore it. We tried to reason with him but, he said we were making a fuss over nothing. Then that afternoon there was a whole bunch of hens clucking around his back garden, too. It got so bad that we realized the only course of action was to take him to court. Which we did and we won. It was expensive but worth it, He was ordered to have the cockerel destroyed or sell it. Whatever he did - we can now sleep peacefully.

Speaker 4

One of the benefits of working as a builder - all that physical activity knocks you out for the night. But since I did my back in and I had to take a desk job, it's harder for me to get off to sleep. This woman down the road has a teenage son, and every Friday and Saturday night their house seems to be the meeting point for all their mates. They hang around in the road and, and maybe they don't realize how far their voices carry or maybe they just don't care. Why can't they have a conversation indoors? I used to be a laid-back kind of guy, but now I feel angry a lot of the time. That's not how I want to be - and I resent the effect it's had on me.

Night after night he'd have it blaring out at full volume - news programmes and reality shows mostly - and all we could do was sit there, seething. He said he couldn't hear it if he had it on any lower. Deaf as a post, he was. It really brings out the worst in you, something like that, and it put a tremendous strain on our marriage. We were so stressed out by it all and we rowed like we'd never rowed before, often about the silliest of things. Anyway, we got so sick of it all, we sold up and bought a place in the country. Shame really, 'cause I like having people around me and there are days here when all I have for company are the pigeons and other birds we have nesting up in the trees across the road.

- W: It's traditional for American kids to spend part of their summer at camp, but the young people looking after them are often from other parts of the world, usually students on their own summer break. So someone, say, from Spain, will arrive at camp and as they get off the bus, they discover they'll be working with someone from Australia, for instance, rather than the American they expected. And then, of course, by the time camp's over, they'll have made travel plans to tour the USA together.
- M: Yeah, it's the people you work with that make you want to go back. It's a fantastic thing to do when you're young. But I would say to anyone who's considering applying to work for a camp that it's not the equivalent of a luxury holiday in a hotel. It is a very satisfying experience – but it does feel a bit like military camp at times. That's not to say that you're taking orders and have no say – it's all very much about teamwork.

It's more that you're often on duty for extended periods - including night supervision of the children. The food's not too bad, though. Make sure you look out for the advertisements in The Globe.

I'm ashamed to say that I didn't know that much about that period of history - the 1900s, of course - when my great grandfather came to Australia and worked, like so many other Chinese, in the gold mines. I've always seen myself as a Chinese Australian, but that was more to do with family values and some of our spiritual beliefs. I have to say that we grew up, my sisters and I, we grew up when my parents were already relatively wealthy, and I had a good education. But I know now that I took it all for granted then. Being involved in the film showed me what hardships our ancestors went through and the sacrifices they made.
- W: I suspect we had the same kind of childhood. Strict Chinese parents. I bet you had to do more homework than other kids in your class.
- M: Yes, but in all other respects, I think we were the same. If you have an Australian accent, you're seen as an Australian.
- W: Hmmm, I think we've come a long way. Our communities used to be hidden from view, but now we're much more integrated. We're not hidden away in cafes and market gardens anymore. And it's no longer the case that every parent is insisting their kid becomes a doctor or a lawyer. You've now also got Chinese Australians performing as musicians. artists, writers - that was a rare sight not so long ago. But it still occasionally happens that when I'm introduced to a European Australian, they like to compliment me on my good English. It doesn't occur to them that my family may have been here longer than theirs.

- M: In the West, tattooing is still not regarded as mainstream art, so one of the reasons for putting the exhibition together is to break down people's preconceptions about this art form. There's this stereotype of tattoos being worn by people trying to show that they're non-conformist in some way - but certain cultures have long been wearing tattoos to show exactly where they do fit in society.
- W: Yeah, they're seen as sacred and the patterns are often incredibly intricate. But if you're from a culture that associates tattoos with antisocial behaviour - you might regard a tattooed person with suspicion, I suppose. That's the kind of mentality the exhibition hopes to confront, really. Um, a large part of the exhibition is dedicated to the Maori people of New Zealand; as with other Polynesian cultures, tattoos for Mapri were an indication of a man's rank within the tribe. But unique to Maori was how facial tattooing also indicated his ancestry - that's why it's essentially taboo for non-Maori men to copy them. That's not to say that Maori women weren't tattoord - but it was often done on the chin. Anyway, the exhibition really does provide a fascinating look at the history of tattooing. ### P = Presenter G = Gahv

- P: Now, in our regular Confessions spot, we listen to award-winning writer Gaby Longfellow, who was recently described as 'the most versatile and prolific writer of her generation'. So what is Gaby's confession?
- G: People assume that because I'm a writer, because I come from Oxford, and because I spend hours poring over books in university libraries doing research for my work, that I must have gone to university myself. And the plain truth of the matter is, of course, that I didn't, I don't have a degree.

During my school years I had a very full social life: I was in a theatre group, I sang in a choir, I had a boyfriend, I went rock climbing. Right through my teens concentration was never my specialist subject at school. I'd always be looking out of the window, thinking of the hundred and one other things I could be doing.

And so it was with my A-levels. Which I failed, quite spectacularly. I could have retaken them, of course, but I was too worried the same thing might happen again. Failing once wasn't too bad - nearly everyone put it down to bad luck, as opposed to any lack of effort on my part. But if I'd failed again I would've been officially declared stupid. Or at least, that's how I saw it then.

But it never occurred to me that I was any less intelligent than my friends who did go to university. In fact, at the time I thought I was the clever one for not going, and I probably came across as being rather amogant as a result. I went to live in London and had a wonderfully exciting time, experiencing many things that my undergraduate friends could not. It was a period that gave me ideas and inspiration for my writing. I also read voraciously and always seemed to have a book in my hand. My reading gave me a passion for language and all its various features; an aptly chosen word, a well-crafted phrase, a striking metaphor - these are all things I try to emulate in my own writing.

Do I have any regrets? No, none at all, indeed, many of my friends agree that university was rather a waste of time. And some of them feel hitter because their degrees pushed them into the types of professions that are detrimental to family life, ones that keep them away from home. They always seem to be worried about losing their well-paid jobs and they have little time or energy to devote to the things, or rather the people, that really matter. I even detect a certain amount of envy from some quarters. A lawver friend of mine is always. asking if he can swap lives with me. I have a great deal of admiration and respect for lawyers, but not, I have to say, enough to want to become one.

But I wouldn't try to discourage young people today from going to university. It has its advantages as well as its drawbacks and people have to make up their own minds. But it doesn't help now that when graduates start work in their chosen profession, many of them have huge bank loans, because they've had to borrow heavily in order to pay their way through university. The idea is that those with degrees will have well-paid jobs and can easily pay back the money in the future. There's no guarantee of that, of course, and besides, it tends to convert money and the prospect of higher earnings into the main incentive for university education. And that, I confess, is not something I agree with.

Part 2: Sentence completion

Hello, my name's Nina Christie, and I'm here today to talk to you about the work I do, which is taking photographs of wildlife, mainly here in Britain and Africa, and also India - when I'm lucky enough to get a job there. Um, I'll start by saying that I get lots of enquiries from young people asking whether it's possible to make a living as a wildlife photographer - and yes, it is, but it's becoming an increasingly competitive world, and so if you want it to work out as a long-term career, you need real determination in the tough times, not to mention a really good business sense. A love of nature isn't going to be enough not if you want to pay the bills. Um. nowadays, I tend to take on projects that are located in places where Eve already done a lot of work - so, for example, some of the big national parks in Africa. Over the years I've built up a good relationship with the local authorities there, so it's relatively easy for me to get the right permits to work off-road and after hours, for example. That definitely gives me the edge over other photographers. So, before I go on a trip, there's quite a bit to sort out - booking guides and vehicles - that sort of stuff, and the other thing that you absolutely have to do in terms of research, is decide which animals you're going to photograph, and then study their behaviour. So, I'll spend time reading up on them, or watching anything available on film. So yeah, doing some groundwork really helps when it comes to predicting how the subject's going to move and react.

I know some of you will be keen to know what camera equipment I use and I've brought along some lenses and filters to show you, but we'll do that a bit later. Anyway, over the years I've learnt through experience that it's also worth packing some basic forms of medicine. If you're wading through swamps or lying in long grass - you're bound to end up being attacked by leeches or tics or some other creepy-crawly. It's all in a day's work!

I'd like to explain a little bit about my own personal attitude to photography. For me, I think that every time I take a photograph - that photograph is a means of capturing a real event. I'd rather spend a long time in the field waiting for the shots I want, than come back to the studio and get the perfect. image through digital manipulation. Having said that, what you don't want to do is only regard your subject through a lens. It's important to look at the animal or bird with your own eyes and see what's going on around it - what it's reacting to. If you don't, there's a danger that you put up a barrier, or rather, it's the camera that does this, and you'll actually be isolated from your subject and you won't see the other photographic opportunities around you. Mainly it's animals and birds, as I said, that I focus on, and sometimes a landscape shot, but very rarely human subjects. My reason for this, I suppose, is that all too often I see tourists snapping away and they haven't even asked permission first. That's something I always do - if and when I do want to take a photograph, say, of the tour guides or local people. It's common courtesy. One other reason that I focus on wildlife photography is that I think it can help with people's awareness of environmental issues. If you want to do something to help save an endangered species, a picture is a good way to bring it to public attention. Over the last few years, I've worked for free for a couple of organizations involved in schemes connected to conservation, and my images have appeared on their websites and publications. It's the least 1 can do, I suppose.

So there I was, the rich tourist in a developing country. Of course, you get people begging at home, but there it was on every street corner. The poverty is so evident, so widespread, and I couldn't help feeling, as a wealthy Westerner, that I was in some way to blame. So I decided to do something to help, despite the attempts of my friend and travelling companion to persuade me otherwise. Every day we were there I put aside a certain amount of money to give to beggars. My friend told me I was being overgenerous, but when I got back home I couldn't help thinking I should have given mora.

Speaker 2

A mate of mine often complained about all the suffering in the world - but he never did anything about it. He said it was difficult for individuals to change things. Well, I just couldn't accept that I took it as a kind of challenge and applied for voluntary work overseas in a school for street children. I thought at first they might not accept me because of my age and inexperience, but I needn't have worried - I didn't need to have any special skills or anything. In fact, that was part of the trouble. Most people were as green as me, so there was no real organization to talk of. Plus, I telt the government there could have done a lot more to help. A shame really, because I was so enthusiastic when I went out there.

Speaker 3

I did a concert last year to raise money for an international relief organization. My manager said it would be good for my image - you know, to be seen to be caring about other people's suffering and so on. I'd love to be able to say that I did it because I admired the work they were doing, and I was concerned about the issues they were lighting for. But that was more of an afterthought, really. I'm embarrassed to admit that my first instinct was to consider what was in it for me, what I stood to gain from it all. Sure, I did the concert for free and helped to mise lots of money for charity, but it's not something I boast about. I'm not at all proud of myself.

Speaker 4

I saw this photograph of activists in a small rubber dingby moving up alongside one of those huge whaling boats. It was a striking image, and it made me think that if they can risk their lives in this way to stop the suffering of an animal, then I can surely risk some of my money to help them. The trouble was, though, I chose the wrong moment to be generous - I didn't realize just how little money there was in my account when I sent off the cheque. It left me with next to nothing, and I couldn't afford to go away on the weekend trip I'd planned with my friends. I wished afterwards that I hadn't been quite so willing to help out.

Speaker 5

Back in the sixties, of course, women's rights still wasn't much of an issue. People just seemed to accept that we got paid a lot less than men, even though we had to do exactly the same work. Amazing, really I mean, if I'd been a man, I'd have felt so guilty about it all. I wanted to help put that right, to challenge existing perceptions, So, I got all the girls on the shop floor to go on a protest march through the fown there must have been about 500 of us altogether. We should have done it years before. They couldn't sack us, of course - there were too many of us - and when I realized that, it spurred me on. In fact, that's what made me go into politics, so I could continue the struggle.

Part 1: Multiple choice

Extract One

M = ManW = Woman

- M: Personally speaking, I'm absolutely delighted that farmers' markets are becoming more popular and I'd say that celebrity chefs have had a fairly large hand in this. If you watch any cooking programme nowadays, there's an obvious bias towards sourcing and using food that's come from nearby farms, and that's had a direct effect on consumer choice. I believe. This is probably a trend that will outlast the craze for organic food, because no one's really clear what that means, anyway,
- W: Yes, it's a bit vague, that label, isn't it? So, have you been going to your local farmers' market for a while?
- M: Yes. And it's very interesting to see which stallholders are still there after a few years, and which have disappeared. My advice to people

- thinking about getting a market stall for themselves and selling something they've made or grown - do a bit of research into customer demand. Overpriced jars of home-made jams and sauces - forget it - no matter how much effort you put into making the bottles look pretty.
- W: Indeed, People go to farmers' markets for the basics. Nothing has to come in a fancy wrapper. They're just after good quality, that's all. As you say, look at what sells if you want to have a go at running your own stall.

Extract Two

W = Woman M = Man

- W: So, in the presentation, one thing we should mention is food packaging. Like this morning. I opened up a new box of cereal, and the bag inside was much smaller - the contents were only half of what you'd expect. That's blatantly deceptive! And, you know, when I look at the amount of plastic and cardboard that ends up in the bin, well, it's appalling, really. And paper's no alternative. That just gets chucked away, too. I'd really like to see the government impose some new policies that force producers and supermarkets to rethink the way they sell stuff.
- M: In principle, I agree with you, but I don't know how it'd work in practice. For a start, for a lot of food, you need the wrapping to keep bacteria. and stuff from spreading, so I can't see how we can do without it. And actually, the other thing is that producers rely on packaging as a means of showing off their brand to their customers, the shoppers. Think about it. They must invest an immense amount of money in research - what images to use, the colours, the wording - all that kind of thing. So if the government were to propose a change in packaging policy, I think they'd have a huge hattle on their hands. But it's an issue we can raise in the presentation.

Extract Three

W = Woman M = Man

W: There's a bit of confusion about what the new policy actually requires schools to do. I've heard people saying how can teachers be expected to go around and confiscate fizzy drinks and chocolate bars?

But from what I understand, pupils can still bring in their own choice of snack; it's just that school canteens have been asked to stop serving up fatty foods and come up with healthier options instead. I do think, though, that the government is a bit over-optimistic if it thinks this will have a significant impact on child health and fitness. But, anyway, at - least it's a proactive stance against childhood obesity.

- M: And I think most parents will welcome anything that tackles this problem. Nowadays, manufacturers. are covering their products with fraudulent health claims - This'll give your child energy all day long." This'll make your kid more intelligent.' - and really what's in there is just a load of sugar. So it's all rather misleading. Even if kids today do know about healthy eating. choices - it's just hard to resist. temptation when it's there in front of you. Junk food is everywhere - in the corner shop, the petrol station you name it. Excluding school as an outlet can only be a good thing.

Unit 14 (Page 183)

Part 2: Sentence completion

Hello, I'm John Lister from the Student Financial Advice Centre here on the university campus. My main aim today is to give you one or two bits of advice on money matters before you get down to the main task of studying next week.

As you may know, not so long ago. you might have received a student maintenance grant from the Local Education Authority to pay for all your living expenses. Now, of course, these grants don't exist and you have to borrow that money from the Student Loans Company. If you haven't applied for your loan already, make sure you do it soon, otherwise you may have to wait several months for your first payment. If you have, then you can expect to receive the money once a term, in other words, in three equal instalments over the course of the year.

And that's the first problem, really. Many students find that their money disappears almost as soon as they get it - and it's often because they fail to plan their finances carefully. To prevent the same thing happening to you, you can download your very own budget planner from the university website. It'll help you record your expected income and expenses for the year and then calculate how much you've got left over for yourself each month. It's worth having a look.

Even then, you may still find that you need a bit of extra financial help. particularly in the first term when your outgoings will probably be quite high. So if you haven't already opened a bank account, bear in mind that some banks offer better overdraft facilities than others. Shop around a bit - find out how much you can go overdrawn without asking for permission from the bank, and without paying any extra interest.

You can, of course, supplement your income by working part-time, but you have to make sure you strike a balance hetween work and study. Some students here work over 20 hours a week in parttime jobs, but I personally wouldn't recommend any more than two evenings a week. That's for you to decide, of course, but I'd certainly wait a few days before applying for jobs, at least until you've got your timetable.

Now, it's clear that a major expense each year is going to be books. For that reason, it's well worth having a word with your course tutor before you rush out and buy everything on your reading list. He or she can advise you on which books are the most important to have. You might also find that you can buy some second-hand from students in higher years who don't need them anymore. Keep an eye on the noticeboard in your faculty building for that.

And when you pay for things, always make a point of asking for student discounts. Don't just assume the shop assistant knows you're a student - not even in the university bookshop. Get the most out of your student travel card and be very careful how you use your credit card. Every year dozens of students come to us at the Advice Centre with huge debts they can't pay off and, in most cases, it's all down to their credit card.

Unit 14 (Page 190)

Part 3: Multiple choice

I = Interviewer C = Chris

- I: When was the last time you spent the whole day without buying anything? With us today on Local Lookout is Chris Dawson, a committed anti-consumerist who'll be taking an active part in next week's Buy Nothing Day, Chris, apart from buying nothing, what exactly is the aim of Buy Nothing Day?
- C: Firstly, let me say that it is anything but a day of militant action with angry anti-government slogans and boarded-up shops closed for business. We're much more into persuasion than provocation as a means of bringing about change. We want to make shoppers question the need to consume and get them doing other things, like spending time with people, as opposed to spending money on them.
- I: The obvious question here is 'Why?' What's wrong with shopping?
- C: We're not saying people are bad because they go shopping. But they do need to think more about the products they buy. Whether, for example, their new trainers were produced using cheap labour in countries where workers' rights are virtually non-existent. What materials and production methods went into producing them, and the effect this might have on the planet. It's all very - well for shopping malls to offer a wealth of choice, but this should not be at the expense of the environment or developing countries.

- I: Indeed. But if people buy nothing on just one day, is it really going to change all that?
- C: Well, for quite a few, Buy Nothing Day will indeed be a life-changing experience, not just a one-off thing. In previous years a lot of people have made long-term commitments to consuming less and recycling more. And that can only be a good thing.
- 1: So it's an annual event, then?
- C: Yes, it is. In Europe it's always the last Saturday in November, while in the States they always have theirs on the day after Thanksgiving, at the start of the Christmas shopping season.
- I: Presumably then Chris, you're against Christmas shopping, too?
- C: Good question! I'm afraid to say my family would never forgive me if I didn't get them anything, though they know how I feel about the whole thing. I just get so annoyed at the whole run-up to Christmas - already in October the shops have got their Christmas stock in, and the January sales start before you've even had a chance to finish your turkey. So it's handkerchiefs and socks if they're lucky, and maybe something special for my girlfriend.
- 1: Let's come back in time if we may, Chris, to next Saturday, What exactly will you be doing then, apart from not buying anything, that is?
- C: Ah. well, erm, I'm not so sure I can tell you that, I'm afraid. Don't want to give the game away. Of course, there'll be the usual handing out of leaflets and putting up posters and so on. But as for the rest, I can't say, You'll have to wait and see.
- I: Last year, then, Tell us about that,
- C: Last year was all a bit surreal, really. A group of us - 15 altogether - all dressed up as sheep and went from shop to shop making loud sheep noises. And behind us we had a shepherd with a sign saying 'Don't follow them, follow your conscience.
- I: And what were people's reactions to it all?
- C: Well, the shopkeepers were generally quite hostile, though we were expecting that. I suppose they saw us as a threat to husiness, and most of them moved us on. Quite a few of the customers saw the funny side of things and had a little chuckle - one or two of them even joined in - but on the whole they couldn't quite believe that someone was questioning the ethics of shopping. It certainly made them think - which is what we wanted, of course.

- I: Is interest in Buy Nothing Day growing? How do you advertise yourselves?
- C: It's getting bigger every year. Yes, we have our leaflets and posters - which you can download from the Internet, by the way - but up until now, at least, it's mostly been down to word of mouth. That may change, of course, as we get higger and better organized. At the moment it's celebrated by about a million people in nearly 50 countries - and that's without the support of TV. In the US, for example, none of the major channels wanted to run the Buy Nothing Day commercial, because they said it went against the country's economic
- I: Yes, indeed. So, Chris, if we want to get involved in all this, how do we go about it? Who organizes it all?
- C: That's the beauty of it all, really you. do. You just go to the Buy Nothing Day website and they give you ideas for what to do. You might want to dress up as something, set up a swap shop ...

the way the writer describes the community centre and the event

In the first paragraph the writer suggests that the community centre benefits many local people, including adults, teenagers and children, and fulfils a range of purposes. This would be more likely to attract a potential sponsors attention. The writer also provides a good amount of detail about the event to show that it will be well organised and interesting; this should also encourage a sponsor to help out.

the point at which the writer asks for money. The writer doesn't ask for money until the third paragraph – using paragraphs one and two to convince the potential sponsor that the community centre is a worthwhile cause.

the verbs and tenses used by the writer in the third and fourth paragraphs

The writer uses modal verbs 'would' and 'might', and a 2nd conditional (If sponsorship from Fresh World were possible, I would be happy to arrange a meeting at any time that was convenient to you.) because of the tentative nature of the request; there is no guarantee that the manager of Fresh World will agree.

Sample answer

Dear Sir/Madam,

I am writing to ask if you are interested in acting like a sponsor for a children's sports club.

The club was set out a year ago by local voluntaries and our goal is to encourage kids from different social environments to make sports. We've seen the advantages on the children's health from doing regular exercise and we also believe that team spirit in youngers will help to them in other aspects of their life.

Until now we have been using the playing fields at Wentworth College. However, some club members have problems getting to the college, so we would like to rent a field and changing rooms closer to the centre of town. Consequently we need obtain a quite large amount of money, so we are planning an event to earn money.

We will charge a small entrance ticket and there will be various activities which people will have to pay for. We would like to have a lottery for a pair of football boots, have an arching and a long jump competition. We also have baby photos of famous sports personalities which aspirants have to guess. There will be stalls selling second hand sports equipment and a healthy selection of food and drinks will also be served.

We would be extremely grateful if you could provide us t-shirts with the club logo on and some prizes for the competitions as different items of sports equipment.

I look forward to your reply.

Yours faithfully,

Katerina

247 words

Examiner's comment

Content: The writer addresses all three points successfully. Good realization of task.

Communicative achievement: Register is consistently formal and polite. The target reader would be well informed and would consider sponsoring the club.

Organization: The introductory paragraph introduces the purpose of the letter well and subsequent paragraphs are well organized.

Language: There are some grammatical errors – acting like, misuse of bare infinitive – need obtain, omission of preposition – provide us t-shirts. However, the writer shows a good control of tenses – have been using, we are planning, will also be served. Word choice is sometimes incorrect – set out, aspirants, and there are errors with word formation – voluntaries, youngers, arching, as well as some spelling mistakes – environments. However, the writer has used a range of vocabulary related to the theme – sponsor, goal, playing fields, changing rooms, long jump, club logo.

Mark: Good Pass

A Review

- (had) never kissed, met The past perfect of 'kiss' is optional since the sequence of events is made clear by 'until'.
- 2 have had
- 3 has been crying
- 4 was always losing (indicating irritation)
- 5 ate (first she are the large meal, then she started to feel sick)/was cating (she started to feel sick while she was eating it)/had eaten (focus on the completed action; she had finished eating it before she started to feel sick)/ had been eating (focus on the activity rather than the completed action)
- 6 Marjorie left when Paul arrived: She left after Paul arrived, possibly as a consequence of his arrival. Marjorie had left when Paul arrived. She left before Paul arrived. Marjorie was leaving when Paul arrived was arriving: Both events occurred simultaneously.
- 7 told/were telling (no difference in mesning), bought have bought The speaker may be situating in his/her mind the action of buying at some specific past time (e.g.

- last week), hence the possible use of past simple. The present perfect can be used to indicate a recent past event with a present result (the book he/she is holding now).
- 8 didn't do/hadn't done, did (do)/had done The past tenses in both these sentences are used to refer to past time. The past simple indicates a regular action. The past perfect can be used to emphasize the sequence of events.

B Further ways of talking about the past

- 3 dissatisfaction, delay(s), claim/assertion/guarantee/ assurances
- 4 failure/inability, importance, result/consequence, awareness/knowledge, education/teaching

3

The following features appear in a and are more characteristic of an informal style.

- contractions
- phrasal verbs turned down
- Informal language such as get (3a), a bit (1a), just (2a)
   Note also there are more words in a than in b e.g. (2a) 33 words (2b) 17 words.

Paragraph 2: This provides more detail about the characters in the film and the events that unfold.

Paragraph 3: This answers the question 'why it is worth watching, and in what ways it could have been better.'

4

It is in the third paragraph that the writer mainly focuses on 'why it is worth watching' e.g. The film is beautiful to watch (a visually stunning epic), and it doesn't represent the Native Americans in a clichéd way (skilfully avoids the usual stereotyping of Native Americans). The writer suggests the film could have been better by saying that the film does not show history as it really happened: there are details about Pocahontas which are simply not true.

The writer also shows support for the film by saying that the director has shown the real reason why Pocahontas saved Smith, and praising a scene in which Pocahontas and Smith teach each other new words.

5

The writer mainly uses past forms to describe real events, and present forms to describe the situation and events of the film.

Sample answer

This summer I have seen an entertaining historical film: 'The King's Speech'. Normally I don't like films about royal people, but this one was very captivated. I felt interested from the first scene.

The film is set in the 1920's epoch and tells a story of King George 6th and his problem with speaking. It also shows how George 6th brother didn't want to be king because he was in love with a divorced woman and he abdiquated.

Colin Firth is the perfect actor for this part. You feel very sorry for him with his affliction and you also get a good idea of how much his wife loved him, because despite she was a posh lady she asked a therapist who was not from the same class as her to help her husband.

Lionel Logue is also very convincing in the film, he is a failure actor who becomes a therapist. He is very bohemian and works with his patients in a dirty old office.

The filming gives a realistic picture of life at that time. You also see the beautiful English countryside and see how London changed since the 1920's. It also shows the beginning of the media image stage. Although some scenes are slow in general the film was perfect.

This is a great film for foreigner students because you can learn a lot about the British royal history and the actors are usually speaking slowly, so it is not too difficult to understand. I think you should include it in your top recommendations for a historic film.

Examiner's comment

Content: Generally good realization of task although there is not much mention of how the film could be improved.

Communicative achievement: Register is appropriately semi-formal as befits a film review. The reader would be informed and would consider using the piece in a magazine.

Organization: Well organized. Each paragraph covers a different point.

Language: There are a number of errors which suggest a lack of control, e.g. with the use of verbs – I have seen, changed since, are usually speaking, linkers – despite, word formation – captivated, failure, foreigner, and one misspelt word – abdiquated. However, none of these seriously obscure communication. The review includes some appropriate vocabulary – entertaining, scene, set, convincing.

Writing: Report Page 34

1

A is the better answer. The register is appropriately formal and shows a wider range of language.

How to go about it

How else could you structure your report? Students could reverse the order of paragraphs 4 and 5. They might also have two recommendations paragraphs one for each advertising medium.

3

Sample answer

Introduction

The aim of this report is to describe the situation of two of the most important ways of advertising in Spain: TV and the sponsorship of sports.

$\underline{TV}$

Undoubtedly, TV is the most important mass media. An advertisement broadcasted at prime time can grab the people's attention in a way absolutely unthinkable for any other form of publicity.

Nevertheless, the high price of this kind of advertising is an inconvenience that prevents companies from offering their products through TV. Moreover, the interruption of the programs with the best audience rating by an advertisement usually annoyes the viewers who, frequently, switch channel until the end of the break.

Spor

Nowadays, sport is one of the preferred pastimes of people. Consequently, the sponsorship of sports events or even the existence of teams with commercial names, like it happens in cycling, is a very profitable way of advertising.

However, something to take into account is the great rivality and hatred around the world of sport; the presence of a brand's name in a football team shirt may be tree advertising for the competitors among the rival team supporters.

Recommendations

Since the high cost of a TV commercial is a considerable problem, a good solution could be the making of shorter adverts. The saving would be significant without affecting the effectiveness. In fact, the most resounding successes in the last years have been achieved by marketing campaigns whose adverts lasted few seconds.

As far as the sporting world is concerned, the key point is probably the carefulness at the time of choosing the event or team to sponsor. This decision can led either to a huge success or to a total failure.

Examiner's comment

Content: The task has been completed reasonably well. It is informative and deals with each of the bulleted items. The introduction could be rather longer. More references could be made to the situation in Spain – this is, after all, the point of the report. In a few places, the report reads a little like a discursive composition.

Communicative achievement: The target reader would be fairly well informed (but see comments in Content section above). The register is appropriately formal throughout.

Organization: Report features are included and the writing is appropriately paragraphed. However, sentences are sometimes too long and slightly difficult to follow, – Moreover, the interruption of the programs with the best audience rating by an advertisement usually annoyes the viewers who, frequently, switch channel until the end of the break. It is not clear what is meant by the references to advertising for competitors.

Language: The writing is generally accurate despite a few errors of word choice and spelling, – programs, annoyes, rivality. There is evidence of a range of vocabulary and tenses in use, with some good collocations in the final section.

Mark: Good pass

Language focus 2: Gerunds and infinitives Page 48

A Review

- 2 Modal verbs (can, should, must, etc) are followed by the infinitive without 'to'.
- 3 Here, the verb 'to be' + infinitive is used to give a kind of order.
- 4 If the verb is the subject of the sentence, the gerund is usually used.

- 5 The infinitive of purpose (to = in order to), giving the reason why he put on his best suit.
- 6 'manage' is followed by the infinitive of the verb.
- 7 'to be' + adjective + infinitive
- 8 'recommend' is followed by the gerund (or object + infinitive see 7 in section B Common problems).

B Common problems

I b let me leave/allow me to leave 'let' is followed by an object and the infinitive without 'to', 'allow' is also followed by an object, but is used with the full infinitive. 2 b get used to sharing 'to' is a preposition in both sentences and is therefore followed by the genund. 3 a It's not worth making 'It's not worth' and 'There's no point' (and 'It's no use') are all followed by the gerund. 4 b would like you to be 'would like' (- object) + infinitive. The use of the possessive adjective 'your' before a gerund [appreciate your agreeing] is typical of more formal English. The object pronoun 'you' would also be possible. 5 b stop ringing 'stop + gerund'; 'stop' can be used with the infinitive of purpose, meaning 'you stop doing one thing in order to do another', e.g. 'He stopped eating (in order) to answer his phone. This is not the case here in sentence b). I'start' can be used with the infinitive or the gerand, with no difference in meaning]

6 a mind going 'mind' - gerund

7 b recommended him to have/recommended having/ recommended (that) he (should) have the infinitive is only used with 'recommend' if 'recommend' is followed by an object.

8 b breaking/having broken 'Admit to doing something'. In this case, 'breaking' would be a more elegant answer, avoiding the repetition of 'have' and 'having'.

Today's world forever is changing. Pupils in school need to learn how to keep up with these changes. They should be encouraged to follow their passion, but also they need to see their future in a practical and realist manner. The question is what can schools do to help pupils in their journey into the world of work.

Schools need to be more concentrated in work-related subjects. If a pupil studies economics there should be a strong practical element and not too much theorical materials. They could learn to work in a team and set up their own business. In addition they could be taught about computer programmes to gain knowledges of money management. There should also be specific classes to help them search a job, for example they could fill up application forms, look at ways of writing a CV and do some role-plays of too interviews.

Another problem pupils have is knowing which type of job to apply for. It would be a good idea to invite employers into the school to give talks about the type of work they do in their company. The pupils should be encouraged to ask questions. It would be perfect if also the pupils could visit different companies or pass some time doing work experience.

In conclusion, pupils have to be constious that their career is like a long journey and they need to take profit from each stage and should learn from their experience. If schools provide them with some basic tools then the journey will be an exciting and enjoyable one.

Possible answer

For most of her working life my mother taught chemistry in a secondary school. She always said the reason she had entered the teaching profession was because her father had virtually forced her to (do so.) Her parents were both teachers, though she herself had no intention of becoming one. However, whereas my grandmother felt that my mother should only follow in their footsteps if she wanted to (do so), my grandfather was determined that she should teach for a living - so she did.

She'd actually like to have become a pharmacist and run her own business, but she wasn't sufficiently quadified (to do so). Apart from this, she might well have had problems raising the necessary capital, and if she'd asked her father to lend it to her, he probably wouldn't have (done so). I think my mother resented my grandfather for the pressure he had put on her, and she always encouraged me to make my own decisions. I did (so) and now I work as a teacher, and my son does, too!

Introduction

As a tutor representative of the students in Saint Martin's College, I have recived information from students, in which they explains their experiences and problems in adjusting to college life.

I'm gonna outline the reasons for the problems and suggest to improve college life for our students.

Problems and solutions

One of the most repeated complaints from our students is that they have not chance to communicate with native people, time in college is limited and they say that they do not have time enough to practice oral expression. I suggest to organize with the people of the area different open days, international days, and any kind of cultural events that make native and international students know each other and allow them to exchange opinions and experiences.

Another problem that students complaint about was the leak of appropriate food provided in the restaurant in the college. I suggest a more international menu should be offered so they feel more homely. Also students complaint saying that they don't have time to eat lunch or relax during breaks because they are only 30 minutes long. This means they sometime arrive to class late. I insist the tutors look at timetables to make sure students have at less one hour for lunch, I am certain the atmosphere in class will be better if students get more relaxed in theirs breaks.

Conclusion

As far as I'm concerned you should take my recommendations and then I am sure this problems will resolv and international students will be feeling much more relax in our college.

Examiner's comment

Content: Reasonable realization of task. Proposal covers the problems and makes suggestions.

Communicative achievement: The information asked for has been provided, but the tone is inconsistent at times and could be considered rude – I'm gonna, I insist. As far as I'm concerned you should take. The overall effect on the target reader would be negative.

Organization: The introductory paragraph describes the purpose of the proposal adequately and subsequent paragraphs are reasonably well organized. Effective use of simple linking devices.

Language: The number of basic errors would distract the reader and create a negative effect, e.g. incorrect verb agreement – they explains, wrong choice of word – leak, homely, at less, word order – have time enough, misuse of the infinitive – suggest to, misspelt words – recived, resolv. The range of language is limited and there is evidence of translation from the candidate's first language.

The exciting world of spies is beautifully reppresented by James Bond films. In Sean Connery's 'Dr No', James Bond fights against a scientist who utilizes atomic energy to divert rockets and missiles. In Pierce Brosnan's 'Die Another Day', the enemy holds a powerfull weapon, a satellite with a diamond crown that functionates as an enormous laser.

Common to both films is the way James Bond saves the world. Another similarity is the exotic and attractive settings. 'Dr No' takes place in appealling crystal water beaches of Jamaica and 'Die Another Day' moves from picturesque 'La Habana' to the very impresive views of Iceland. But the more great similarity of all is that in both films there is a comparable scene of Ursula Andress in the first one and Halle Berry in the second one, which coming out of the water dressed in exactly the same bikini.

What sets one film apart from the other is the gap of time. Old James Bond was sciovinist and even a bit racist instead Pierce Brosnan's Bond treats Halle Burry as an equal and as well behaves it could be said as a perfect gentleman. It is also noticeable in respect of the gadgets they use, there is no comparison between the Giger Counter (to measure radioactivity) used by Sean Connery and the invisible car of Pierce Brosnan.

Both films are action-packed and compelling, which makes the perfect choice for a diverting evening's viewing, however, if you prefer a visually appealling experience, but I have to say maybe less plausible also, then 'Die Another Day' is the film for you.

Examiner's comment

Content: The writer successfully addresses the different parts of the question. The task is well fulfilled and certainly analytical rather than merely descriptive.

Communicative achievement: The register is appropriately semi-formal, as befits an arts review in a newspaper. It correctly addresses the reader directly and gives the personal opinions of the reviewer. The target reader would be informed and would consider using the piece in the magazine.

Organization: The writing is well organized and introduces similarities and differences in an appropriate and logical manner. There is clever use of paragraphing, each paragraph being clearly about something different.

Language: There are a number of mistakes which suggest a lack of control, e.g. grammatical errors – which coming, more great, and misspelt words – reppresented, powerfull, atractive, appealling, impresive, sciovmist (chauvinist). The days when bullying just occurred in the playground or on the way home from school are terminated. Now, with cyberbullying victims can suffer everywhere and at every time and it has become absolutely difficult to know if a child is being subjected to this or perhaps is actually a cyberbully themselves.

The government needs to set clear guidelines on how to prevent cyberbullying in schools and what to do if pupils suffer of this problem. One idea is for part of the school syllabus to be dedicated to matters as cyberbullying. This would include group discussions which lead on to pupils drawing up their own lists of dos and don'ts. Kids could also design posters and leaflets giving advice on how to protect themselves against cyberbullies.

Punishment is another matter the government needs to work on. Cyberbullies will often be under the age of 18 so a suitable set of penalties needs to be established. Schools could start with informing parents of any unacceptable online behaviour and the police could be informed in extreme cases.

In conclusion, the government needs to do everything it can to avoid cyberbullying. Parents and teachers need to know what steps to take if it occurs. The possibility of being punished can work like a deterrent, but it is always better to educate kids to respect themselves. In this way they will get a comprehension of what is acceptable behaviour and will seek for help if they are exposed to any kind of cyberbullying.

Content: The writer covers the main points successfully. Good realization of task.

Communicative achievement: Register is consistently formal. The target reader would be well informed.

Organization: Paragraphing and simple linking devices have been used effectively. Clear introduction and conclusion.

Language: There are a number of non-impeding grammatical errors – at every time, absolutely difficult, like a deserrent, respect themselves. However, the writer also demonstrates a command of some more complex structures, e.g. various forms of the passive – is being subjected to, to be dedicated to.

The choice of vocabulary is sometimes incorrect – terminated, matters, but the writer also uses a good range of vocabulary related to the theme – playground, syllahus, dos and don'ts, leaflets, deterrent.

He states that he is an 'Internot', someone who has no interest in the Internet.

He suggests that computers often lose information, and that they are unattractive and bulky. He believes they are overpriced, but speculates that one day they may be cheaper, the size of an answering machine, and 'idiot proof', meaning that they will be very easy to use.

Introduction

This report looks at the actual resources and facilities available in Highford Academy multimedia centre. The opinions of students using the centre have been considered in order to do suggestions for improvments. Possible cost cut measures are also being discussed.

One of the main problems which students mentioned was the lacking of space. It is often hard for students to complete their works effectively because there is not enough space. I suggest letting students to use the classroom next-door. This would not cost the school anything and would be appreciated by students.

Secondly, there are insufficient computers and students abuse of the facilities by spending too much time at social networks. It might be an idea to install a filter and only let access to educatitive websites. Also if more sockets were installed in the classroom next-door students could bring their own laptops.

A large amount of students have complained about the headphones being broken, so some new sets should be brought. PC City has some good discounts now so we can buy new ones for a cheap price. Also a system of checking the headphones in and out would encourage students to take more care of the equipments. Finally, many students enjoy reading about the news and one requested thing is that the centre pays an online subscription for some newspapers and magazines.

Conclusion

In conclusion, without spending a lot of money, the multimedia centre library could be improved a lot by letting students to use the classroom next-door, buying a few online subscriptions and controlling the use of computers and other equipments.

Content: The writer addresses the main points successfully. Good realization of task.

Communicative achievement: Register is consistently formal. The target reader would be well informed.

Organization: Features of a proposal are included. Paragraphing and simple linking devices have been used effectively.

Language: There are some errors, e.g. in the choice of words - actual resources, do suggestions, works, amount, cheap price, misspelt words - improvments, educantive, verb tenses - being discussed, prepositions - at social networks, uncountable nouns - equipments, and some grammar is rather awkward - one requested thing. However, the writer demonstrates a good range of vocabulary - facilities, resources, filter, sockets, headphones, and a variety of grammar structures - have been considered, appreciated by students, take more care of.

Sample answer

We all know how important can be tourism for any region. Sometimes it's the only source of money, the real motor of the economy. Anyway, it does not always have only a positive impact.

Very often the first victim is the environment. Big hotels, commercial centres and others attractions do not always respect what there was around before. Very often the money is more important that the nature that never complains. Consequently it's time to make us a question: Is it possible to make tourism sustainable? What shall we do to avoid destruction of the environment? I think that there are some solutions for this problem: First of all the local government must be very sensitive to all kind of abuse that might bring a development of such tourist resorts. It must control all kind of permissions related to construction, because if buildings are attractive a good type of tourists will visit the country.

Moreover, the local government should try to achieve employment for local people, It should be one of the most important points of any agreement with any company. If a hotel needs a guide they should have one from the local people. They should also enthuse local people to work in traditional restaurants where the tourists can cat typical food.

I think that sustainable tourism is possible. The question is if we have people good enough to provide it. I hope so, because if not, we might be very sorrow and it could be too late to turn things round.

Content: The writer addresses the main points successfully. Good realization of task.

Communicative achievement: Register is consistently semi-formal. The use of direct questions would engage the reader, and the reader would have a clear idea of the writer's opinion.

Organization: Paragraphing and linking devices have been used effectively. Clear introduction and conclusion.

Language: The number of errors shows a lack of control, e.g. incorrect word order – important can be tourism, use of pronoun instead of adjective – others attractions, awkward constructions – the nature that never complains, and word formation – enthuse, very sorrow. However, none of the errors obscure communication. The writer also uses vocabulary related to the theme – source of money, real motor of the economy, victim, abuse, resorts, guide.

W = Woman M = Man

- W: Did you see that programme on global warming the other day? I thought it was kind of irresponsible to present the views of a minority of scientists who think that man-made global warming doesn't exist.
- M: Yes, but remember that one of the first things we were taught on the course is that you must have a balanced approach to reporting. That means allowing the public to hear both sides of the argument. At the same time, you and I know perfectly well that a real balance doesn't exist. You wouldn't, for example, give as many column inches to the enemy opinion in a war, would you? And the same goes for the global warming debate. I'd say that, realistically, far more attention is given to the scientific view that elimate change is happening—and not to the few voices that deny it.
- W: I guess so. After the programme I read a lot of comments posted on the channel's website. There was quite a bit of mixed reaction. Some people were making the point if global warming isn't man-made, why bother taking steps to save the environment?" That's why I thought the programme had been rather ree'sless. But I suppose that if the media restly had a lot of influence, people would have changed their behaviour already, like stop using their cars so much. You know what people are like only government regulations will stop them from polluting and messing up the natural world that's what it'll take in the end.

I = Interviewer A = Andy

- I: Andy, your company, Kiss Chocolates was established a good 20 years before you took over. What made you suddenly decide to take a leap into chocolate making?
- A: Actually a combination of random events. I was made redundant in 2002, and although I absolutely - loved advertising, it was a relief to leave because it meant that all the uncertainty about whether the job would last was gone. At the same time, my wife had just happened to come across the chocolate shop and was buying a gift box, when she overheard the owner mention her desire to retire. We both thought the product was excellent and we both knew there would always be a demand for chocolate.

- I: Yes, indeed! And there are probably a lot of people listening who are very envious of you. What's the best part of the job for you, Andy?
- A: Well, the product is certainly hard to resist! But because people come in to buy the chocolate as a gift, as a token of love or of appreciation for another person, you never have to face anyone in a bad mood. That's what makes it all so rewarding for me even more than the prospect of long-term financial security.

He is a hero in the sense that he is a brave, honourable man on a mission, but fate delivers him one cruel blow after another. As events, unfold, you can see how tragedy is inescapable.
- J: Now the book is based on various manuscripts that JRR Tolkien never completed before he died. And it's taken his son Christopher 30 years to put them together as a single cohesive story.
- A: That's right and overall, he really has produced a thing of beauty. Readers will notice, however, that one passage may be written in some kind of ancient. English and then the next in a more contemporary manner as you'd expect in a book pieced together from manuscripts written over a 50-year period, and that can be a little distracting. Tolkien's characterization is sometimes underdeveloped but not so this time, as Christopher has given us a hero we can identify ...

I = Interviewer S = Sandra D = David

- I: On this week's In Partnership programme we talk to Sandra Peyton and David Sadler, who together run the successful media company, Advert Eyes, specializing in the making of TV commercials. Sandra, if I could start with you. What were you doing before you set up in partnership with David and what made you change?
- S: Well, I was directing er, drama mostly for a small satellite TV company. It was an interesting, experimental time for me they were a young, dynamic group and seemed to be going places. But these were troubled times for the business in general and they just weren't making enough money. Anyway, things weren't looking too good for me; as I'd been the last to arrive, I reckoned I'd probably be the first to have to leave.
- So you jumped before you were pushed, so to speak.
- S: That's right, and that was a great shame, because I'd never felt so comfortable working in a team as I did with that group of people.
- I: David, you had a similar background, didn't you?
- D: Yes, I'd also made a name for myself directing TV drama, but with the much larger Trenton TV. I left them because they were moving in a different direction to where I wanted to go. But the experience proved invaluable for the future – I can see that now.
- I: In what way?
- D: Working in close collaboration with others is an integral part of this business—that's always been clear to me but I came to realize that you can't rely on other people to make things work. It's a tough old world and ultimately it's down to you it's a question of attitude. Things only happen if you let them and if you only see grey skies and gloomy days ahead, that's what you'll get.
- So the whole thing focused you for your future with Advert Eyes.
- D: That's right, I did a lot of growing up with Trenton.
- It Well, tell us how you met each other, Sandra.

- S: We were introduced at a party by a mutual friend. I remember I was very wary of David at first. He already had quite a reputation in the business his past work spoke for itself. And he looked so serious, so apparently indifferent to everything. He mentioned some vague idea he had for setting up a business, something to do with advertising but that wasn't what struck me most. Ljust couldn't get over how animated, how passionate he became when he talked about well, everything really. It was difficult not to be carried along by his words.
- So when he asked you to join him, you had no hesitation in accepting?
- D: Well, it was actually Sandra who asked me. And I was the one who had no hesitation. My colleagues at Trenton had warned me against going into business with a complete unknown they said it was too much of a gamble. But when I met Sandra, it was like looking into a mirror Here at last was someone on my wavelength, someone who looked at life through the same camera lens. And, anyway, I felt it was time to do something different, to live a little dangerously.
- I: And has it been? Dangerous, I mean.
- D: Anything but. Funnily enough, though, it's turned out that we do have quite a lot of differences, but these have all been to our advantage. Sandra, for example, has much more of a business brain than 1 do.
- I: Is that right, Sandra?
- S: Well, yes, it seems to be a hidden talent of mine. But I've had to learn the hard way. Raising money, for example, was an absolute nightmare – we just couldn't seem to get the finance.
- I: That must have been quite disheartening.
- S: Well, no, you can't afford to let things like that get you down. It was no good getting upset about it; throwing a tantrum in a bank manager's office is never a good idea - you might need to go back there one day. No, I just couldn't work out what the problem was, given our experience and the way the advertising market was shaping up at the time. We were just a small concern, asking for a small amount of money.
- But you obviously got the money.
- S: Yes, I met an investor who understood what we were about – and then, once we'd made a couple of ads, money was easier to come by.
- David, how does, et, advertising work compare with TV drama? Is it very different.
- D: Well, for a start there's more money around than for normal TV work, and that can be very liberating. But the market's understanding of quality may not be the same as yours and you find your creativity stifled. Yes, it's our own company, and it may seem a creative business to an outsider. But an advert is not your own baby in the same way that a TV drama, might be. There are too many people who have a say in what you do and what goes into the advert.

- S: Yes, I'd go along with that, although for me, running a business can be incredibly creative.
- I: So what does the future hold for Advert Eyes, What are your plans for the company?
- S: Well, we can't really say too much at the moment. It's not that we're not willing to, it's just that we're not entirely certain how things will work out ourselves.
- D: That's right. The normal thing might be to look at some type of long-term growth for the business, but at the moment we're concentrating on consolidating our position, rather than branching out. Who knows what the future will bring?
- I: Sandra, David, the very best of luck for the future. There we must leave it. Thank you.

S and D: Thank you.

Speaker 1

I could barely string two sentences together when I first arrived, and now I'm reasonably fluent. In that sense, then, I've achieved what I set out to do – just by being here and mixing with the locals. I've met some great people since I got here, especially the family I'm fiving with. But there's a big downside to all this. I decided to come here on my year out because it's so different to all the other places I could have gone to. Plus it seemed so exciting when I came here two years ago. However, that was on holiday and I realize now that living here is actually rather duil. I really wish I'd gone somewhere on the mainland now – my girlfriend's having a great time there.

Speaker 2

My father studied here as a young man, so I knew quite a lot about the country before I came. And when the head of my company's overseas operations told me our branch here wasn't doing too well, and would I please go and sort things out. I was very happy to accept. My husband came out shortly after I did and like me, immediately fell in love with the place. The pace of life suits us to a tee and the food is just out of this world.

Ultimately, though, we're home birds and when this posting's over we'll want to go back to be nearer our grandchildren – if we ever have any, that is!

Speaker 3

I was working in the dullest job you can imagine – nine to five every day on the computer, answering customers' email queries. But it was thanks to that job that I got to know Patti, who was over on a work exchange programme in another department. She only stayed for three months, though, so after that nearly all our contact was by email. Of course, you can't keep something going like that indefinitely, so I took the plunge and moved out here. Life is fine – despite the overcast skies and regular downpours! I have to admit, though, it does get me down sometimes. I'd like to get back home more often, but it's just too far,

Speaker 4

I only wish I'd made the break earlier. It's so vibrant in this part of the world – there's so much more going on. I think if I was still back home, I'd be so depressed, what with the current climate there and so on. The fact is I was in a bit of a rut. I was sick of the same old thing, day in, day out and I thought. There's got to be more to life than this'. So I looked into the price of property in different parts of southern Europe, and this area was one of the cheapest. It didn't take me long to settle hi—the language isn't much of a problem and I've even got myself a little part-time job. Keeps me out of trouble!

Speaker 5

A few years ago I set up in business with a friend of mine. Then I decided to go it alone and bought out my partner's share. Unfortunately, before long, things started to go wrong and I was up to my eyes in debt. Call it cowardice, but I just couldn't deal with it and I moved out here. It got me out of a mess, but I can't say I'm having the time of my life. I know a lot of different people here, but I just don't seem to fit in with them. We share the same language – more or less – but we're worlds apart in most other respects. One thing's for some – if ever I do go back to face the music, it'll be for good.

As the Grammar reference explains, the subject of a participle clause is usually the same as the subject of the main clause in a sentence. Sentence 2 (a) shows that a participle clause can be given its own subject to avoid ambiguity.

- Sentence (a) suggests that the police were driving home from the pub when they stopped him.
   Sentence (b) means that the police stopped him as he was driving home from the pub.
   Sentence (b) is more likely.
- 2 Sentence (a) means that Elisa took over all the manager's responsibilities because the manager was ill. Sentence (b) suggests that because she was ill, Elisa took over all the manager's responsibilities. Sentence (a) is more likely.

vocabulary	There are several phrasal verbs, (band over, nin out, head down) and informal expressions (keep an eye, help yourself, keep things sweet)	There are a number of formal expressions, e.g. on arrival, highly recommended your personal use register and tone	The writer sounds very friendly, e.g. so would you mind - ing? Get in touch if you need any more info	The language used is more suitable for an official notice, e.g. bottles and tins must be placed please refrain from grammatical structure	The writer mainly uses the active voice: First, you need to know how to If you feel like + ing	The writer often uses the passive voice: You will be let into the building windows can be left open these can be accessed organization	The writer has used different paragraphs to introduce new subjects, which makes it easier for the reader to follow.	The writer has used subheadings and bullet points; aithough this format presents all the information in a clear way, it doesn't give a very welcoming or friendly impression.

In the Advanced exam, it would be better to write an email or letter like sample A. This will allow you to use a range of informal expressions, words and phrases and use a variety of informal structures.

Hi Angela

Thanks a lot for offering to help at the boutique on Saturday. You can't imagine what an alleviation it is to know you'll be there. You are making me a big tayour! Jim will post the keys through your postbox on Friday afternoon. Firstly can you arrive to there at 8.45 on Saturday. The lock on the back door is a bit annoying, you need to pull the door against you and then turn the key if not it doesn't open.

Then when you go in you'll need to turn on the lights. The box for the electricity is in the office at the back next to the cuboard. Push down the two black switches. After this could you check all the clothes on the shelfes are folded neatly and the window exhibition is okay. Open the shop door at 9.00.

Now there are a few things I need to advise you about the staff. You probably remember Julia, well she's a nice girl. I mean she's really good at maintaining the boutique tidy, but she's very shy and if there is a problem with a customer she's not very good at solving it out. So if you see her having any problems please help her. Also could you tell me what time Dave does arrive as he has been coming in late recently.

At 5.30 you can shut the shop. Remember to turn off the electricity and turn on the alarm. I'll come to your house to gather the keys on Sunday and bring you a nice present.

If you have any other problems, call to me on my mobile.

Thank you again.

Content: The writer provides all the necessary information. Good realization of task.

Communicative achievement: Register is consistently informal, friendly and appreciative. The target reader would be well informed and clear about what is expected.

Organization: Paragraphing and simple sequencing has been used effectively.

Language: The number of mistakes suggests a lack of control. There are some cases of inappropriate word choice—alleviation, exhibition, advise, maintaining, gather, misspelt words—cuboard, shelfes, and the grammar is sometimes inaccurate—making me a big lavour, arrive to, against, solving it out, what time Dave does arrive, call to. However, the errors do not obscure communication.

Looking through a newspaper one day, he saw a cottage for sale in a picturesque rural area. Situated in a small village near the church, it had a conservatory and a large garden containing fruit trees; it seemed perfect. Not known for his decisiveness, Charlie surprised everyone by putting down a deposit on it the very next day. Having seen it once, he immediately made up his mind to buy it.

Having moved into the cottage, he soon realized it was not the peaceful rural idyll he had expected. Chiming every hour on the hour, the church bells kept him awake at night. Also, the village being in an area of outstanding beauty, coachloads of tourists arrived every weekend disturbing the peace and quiet. Worst of all, objecting to the presence of outsiders in the village, the locals were very unfriendly towards him. Having lived there for six months, Charlie decided to move back to the city.

I would like to suggest a weekend programe which would inform to The Far Horizons Club members about some traditional crafts of my country Sweden.

Dala Horse workshop

I would be disposed to give a workshop on how to carve a traditional Swedish Dala horse and then participants could paint the seat and straps onto some other wooden horse models that we could impart. While we do the workshop I can tell participants about the origin of the Dala horse and put a short video of how families used to make them in the long winter time in Sweden. This will be fun and help participants understand how this craft created a snug atmosphere for families.

Making Fattigman cookies

Another Swedish club member could give a demonstration on how to make delicious Fattigman cookies. They are not difficult to prepare so we can also let participants as well make some more cookies. Later in the day we can offer participants a cookie each. I never have tasted cookies as these in another country, so I think this will give a good impression of our cuisine.

We could have a lesson on how to do the Hambo dance. The teacher could wear traditional clothes and show the participants the basic footsteps. This will be very lively and make all the members laugh a lot.

With my suggestions I am sure the events will be a great success and the club members will go home knowing a lot more about my country and traditions.

Examiner's comment

Content: The writer puts forward good suggestions. Effective realization of task.

Communicative achievement: Register is consistently semi-formal. The target reader would be well informed and would consider putting on the proposed event.

Organization: Proposal features are included and the writing is appropriately paragraphed using clear headings. The introduction and conclusion are concise and effective.

Language: There are a number of non-impeding grammatical errors, e.g. redundant preposition — inform to, word order — as well, never have tasted, confusion of 'like' and 'as' — as these, and some awkward use of language — long winter time. Word choice is sometimes incorrect — disposed, seat, impart, footsteps. However, there is also evidence of more complex vocabulary — snug, carve, cuisine.

climate change: The build-up of carbon droxide in the atmosphere, caused for example by high energy consumption, leads to a rise in the Earth's temperature. This in turn can lead to a melting of glaciers and the polar ice caps, and a consequent rise in sea levels, flooding and destruction to coastal areas.

whale hunting: This is still authorized by a small number of countries, despite an international moratorium and protests from environmentalists. It is justified either on scientific grounds or for commercial purposes and to prevent the whale population from growing too large and consuming huge stocks of fish.

women's rights: According to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, women are entitled to the enjoyment of all human rights and to be treated equally to men in both economic and social life.

child labour: In many developing countries, children are forced to work in poorly paid jobs, sometimes in subhuman conditions. This is usually as a result of poverty, and in some cases because they have been orphaned by Aids. Some work in sweatshops, producing goods for Western markets. This leads to children missing out on an education and the perpetuation of poverty in the country.

The World Day Against Child Labour is celebrated every year on June 12th.

human rights: On December 10, 1948 the United Nations proclaimed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It included the following:

- All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights.
- No one shall be held in slavery or servitude.
- No one shall be subjected to torture or degrading treatment.

Violations of human rights occur throughout the World.

GM foods: Genetically modified foods, or GM foods are grown from crops which have been altered through biotechnology to make them more resistant to insects and disease. The most common GM crops are soybeans, corn, cotton and sugar beet and are mainly used in processed foods or in unimal feed.

Supporters of generic modification say that it makes crops more productive and can also increase their nutritional value. Opponents point to the dangers of cross-pollimation, whereby GM crops can spread their genes to other plants growing nearby. While producers say there are no health concerns associated with GM foods, opponents maintain that insufficient tests have been carried out and the long-term effects on health are unknown.

Since April 2004 strict regulations have been in force in the European Union concerning the labelling of foods which contain genetically modified produce.

had to and didn't need to are not modal verbs.

Modal verbs go with a main verb (I can go; can = modal, go = main)

Modal verbs express the mood or attitude of the speaker and are followed by the infimuve without to (with the exception of ought to). In addition, an auxiliary verb is not used to form the negative of a modal verb (I must not, I shouldn't, etc).

We should have done it years before' could also be written as We ought to have done it years before'.

don't have to - no obligation: it is not necessary to tell him the whole truth

mustn't - prohibition: I don't want you to let him know

I believe that technology plays a more important role than testing when wishing to improve standards of literacy in schools. Using technology can give the child a more positive learning experience, whilst testing just points up the mistakes the child is making.

Using technology children can have fun learning to read and write and as long the programmes they are using are well designed children will progress without realizing they are learning. The teacher can monitor the child's progress and deal about any problems at a later date without interrupting the flow of concentration.

Using the Internet to access books is quick and easy so if a child wishes to read a certain book they can download it rather than search the library or bookshop by what time they may have lost interest. Today's generation of children find reading from a tablet more 'cool' and teenagers who are poor readers can read at their own level without worrying about being made fun of.

I feel that testing has a very limited place in improving literacy standards. In a test situation many children experience anxiousness and will not give their best performance. Although testing can show some of the child's problems these can also be seen by the teacher in individual or group reading or writing sessions.

In conclusion, schools have to decide whether test results which may improve the school's image or using technology in an imaginative way to develop a litelong love of literacy in their pupils is more important.

Ana's contributions are of reasonable length, though they could certainly be developed more. She is clearly hindered by the level of her language: she uses a limited range of vocabulary and her responses are rather inaccurate.

Jan is clearly a stronger student. He develops his responses well, uses a much wider range of language, and in this part of the test at least, there are no inaccuracies. (He corrects himself at one point.)

a No attempt is made to compare the pictures. The contribution is limited to a description of the two pictures with a single, short comment on why they might be checking the time. This candidate will probably find it difficult to continue talking for one minute, as he/she is likely to run out of things to say. Linking of ideas is limited to the use of because.

b Candidates often waste time identifying the pictures they are going to talk about. Many also use prepositional phrases (on the right, at the top, etc), though often incorrectly (e.g. in the left picture down), causing candidates to become confused as they struggle with the language. Candidates should also avoid merely repeating information given in the instructions ('all three pictures show women checking the time') or stating the obvious ('This woman is an athlete').

e This candidate begins comparing the pictures immediately, rather than merely describing them. Ideas are linked well (both convey), the athlete, on the other hand', and 'suggesting something unexpected has happened') and there is an attempt to use a range of grammar and vocabulary, some of which is presented in this book (e.g. 'let them know' in Unit 12; 'her car won't start' in Unit 8; 'fallen ill' in Unit 7). Note too the use of the modal verb might rather than perhaps or maybe as in the first example.

Jan's language is very varied, particularly when speculating. He uses a range of modal verbs and other structures for this purpose:

She might have realized, she may be phoning, she could also be phoning, it's very likely she's done the run before, this is probably her best time, the little boy looks as if he's watching.

However, he fails to address the part of the task which asks him to say 'how much influence time might have in their daily lives'. He seems to have forgotten this and the fact that the questions are printed on the visuals page, and he struggles to find more things to say.

Ana, on the other hand, completes her task satisfactorily, though once more her language is not very varied. She opens with in this picture each time and her language of speculation is limited to the use of I think and maybe' perhaps with present simple or present continuous, or else seem(s) to be. She searches for words, repeats or something like that and uses language inaccurately (e.g. it's probable this is the mother, she is enjoying with the moment, the woman is very concentrated, she is putting the new washing machine).

Comments

Interaction in this part of the test is very good. They respond to what each other says, sometimes inviting their partner to comment with a question: Don't you agree? What do you think? Ana asks for clarification when she isn't sure what Jan means: You mean they are not homest, et, corrupt?' which is a sensible and natural strategy to take. There are no over-long moments of hesitation. When it comes to making a decision in the second task, it's clear that both students have been listening carefully to what the other person has said, and this allows them to negotiate and reach a decision. Both refer back to the discussion in the first task with phrases such as As I said before and you made the point before.

Ana seems to have gained in confidence and contributes well to the discussion, although she lacks the range of vocabulary and structure that Jan has,

They decide that a pop/rock singer probably has the most status amongst young people.

Part 4: Further discussion Page 169

In contrast to Part 3, in this part Jan and Ana have not understood that they can and should interact with each other. The interlocutor continually has to prompt them to respond to each other's comments, sometimes leaving a pause, which they fail to pick up on. At one point, Ana tentatively asks, Can I say something more?, showing that she is unaware that this is a discussion rather than a simple question and answer session. In her last turn, she does respond to a point made by Jan (I agree with you) but then limits herself to repeating the same ideas that he has just expressed.

No. The writer has not made any attempt to reassure her friend. On the contrary, comments such as 'Tm not surprised you're a bit dannted by it all', 'my own bitter experience' and 'even if it leaves you utterly exhausted' will only serve to make him more nervous.

The following expressions introduce advice:
don't make the same mistake as I did and by on there's no point preparing You'd be better off filling
That's not to say you shouldn't put out it's not worth going
I wouldn't spend hours making one if I were you

... is not to be recommended
Other evidence of a wide range of language includes:

Yes I can certainly give you some advises about preparing a barbecue for your football club's dinner. I've gone to lots of these parties for end of season.

The first thing to think is when you want to serve the food. Obviously is the barbecue difficult to take to the venue, and it takes time to set up all the tables, etc and take all the food from your car. If you serve the food too early some people may not arrive yet. If too late and the children may get so hungry, they start getting tired and silly. So I would recommend to tell people you will serve the food at, for example, 8 o'clock.

Of course, for a barbeeue, even in summer, you'll need a plan for if it rains. When I prepared it we hired a small tent. In the end we needn't have it, but better safe than sorry.

Third thing, you need to know how many people are coming and if there are vegetarians. You can get 'veggie burgers' for them. But don't go crazy with the salads – it always seems the salad that gets thrown away. It's so difficult to eat lettuce from a paper plate with a plastic fork – most people don't bother.

Anyway, that's all I can think of now, but give me a ring if you need anything. Just relax yourself and prepare it in detail—then you'll be absolutely fine and it will, too!

Examiner's comment

Content: The writing is slightly under length and although the letter adequately covers the first two points (detailing your previous experience and giving advice), more attention to the reassurance section would enhance the completion of the task. Simply to say relax yourself and prepare it in detail ... is not very reassuring.

Communicative achievement: The target reader would be partially informed, if not very reassured. The register is appropriate for an informal letter.

Organization: The organization is appropriate and logical for an informal letter. The paragraphing nicely reflects three different points the writer considers important (timing of food, a bad weather plan, preparing salad). However, a number of sentences are confusing or difficult to follow – If you serve the food too early some people may not arrive yet. In the end we needn't have it .....

Language: The writing is mostly accurate despite some confusing sentences. The use of language is sometimes rather vague – When I prepared it ..., ... and it will, too!, and the use of the word advises in the first sentence. The range of language is sufficient yet unambitious – you'll need a plan for if it rains. Third thing, you need to know ....

Absolutely is used with non-gradable adjectives such as delighted, fascinating or freezing. Fairly, a bit and very are used with gradable adjectives such as those in b, c and d. We do not normally say very delighted, fairly fascinating or a bit freezing. Nor so we say absolutely large or absolutely interesting.

Examples of other modifiers which can be used with gradable adjectives are:

- 8 a the dismissal of a member of staff from the catering department
- 9 b a man of average height
- 10 b new children's clothes

3

- 1 'Noun of noun' (boule of lemonade) is used to refer to the drink
  - 'Noun + preposition + noun' (jar of jam) is used to refer to the container.
- 2 'Noun i noun' (chicken soup) is used for products from dead animals.

The 's genitive (lamb's wool) is used for products from living animals.

- 3 door handle is an accepted compound noun: house roof is not, so an of structure is required. The 's genitive (house's roof) is not likely since house is an inanimate object.
- 4 The 's genitive (last Sanday's newspaper) with a time expression is used to refer to specific moments or events. 'Noun + noun' (a Sanday newspaper) is used to refer to things that occur or appear regularly.
- 5 The 's genitive is used with time expressions to refer to duration (four weeks' holiday).
  - When the head noun (course) is countable, the modifying noun (three-day) is normally in the singular and hyphenated. Since the modifying noun functions as an adjective, no plural s is added.
- 6 Shop window is a recognized compound noun and normally found in that form. Note the position of the demonstrative in the of structure.
  - Whilst the source of his inspiration is also correct, source of inspiration is a collocation and generally found in that form.
- 7 Nouns such as top, bottom, middle, side, edge, back, front, heginning and end, which refer to a part of something, are normally used in an of structure. Mountain top, roadside, seaside are exceptions.
- When the head noun (dismissal) is modified by a long and/or complex phrase (a member of staff from the catering department) the of structure is preferred. Note that the s genitive can be used for an action done by or to a person,
  - e.g. Mr Smith's resignation, the President's murder.

- 9 'Noun + noun' (brick construction) can be used when talking about what something is made of. In other cases, when describing the characteristics of a person or thing, the 'Noun of noun' structure is used.
- 10 a (children's new clothes) is a 'specifying genitive' here: it refers to specific clothes worn by specific children. In this case the adjective describing the clothes can be placed between the two nouns.

b (new children's clothes) is a 'classifying genitive' here: it refers to clothes worn by children in general. In this case the two nouns cannot be separated.

Ready for Advanced

Ready for Advanced is a comprehensive course which offers thorough preparation for the Cambridge English: Advanced (CAE) examination. This third edition of Ready for Advanced supports students with a range of activities designed to systematically develop skills for success in the Cambridge English: Advanced (CAE) examination.

Key features of the Coursebook:

- Additional exam-type listening practice to improve confidence
- Exam-style tasks in each end-of-unit Review section
- Systematic training on all four papers of the Cambridge English: Advanced (CAE) examination
- A comprehensive Ready for Writing unit, covering all possible task types
- Complete grammar and vocabulary syllabuses for reference and development
- In-depth coverage of the combined Reading and Use of English paper

Each Coursebook is now packaged with a code to access Macmillan Practice Online (MPO), providing students with even more material for exam preparation:

- Two computer-based practice tests
- Access to all of the Coursebook audio in downloadable MP3 format
- Complete video of all four parts of the Speaking exam, which is analysed in detail in the Ready for Speaking unit, to provide students with further support as they prepare for the Advanced exam

Course components:

Coursebook with key with MPO
Coursebook without key with MPO
